———Ss 31, 33 and 43—Lease without permission—Power to cancel—Power to deal with minor's property.

The District Judge cannot exercise judicial authority in relation to third persons in proceedings under the Guardian and Wards Act. It the lease executed by the guardian is voidable, the same not having been executed with the permission of the District Judge, the latter has no power to cancel it in the sense that the lease becomes inoperative by force of that order. Any question as regards the validity of the lease is to be determined by a competent Court in a regular suit. There is no provision in the Guardian and Wards Act which empowers the District Judge to exercise disposing power over the minor's property under the management of a lawful guardian. It is the function of the guardian to deal with the property of the minor and to administer it. The guardian may obtain the advice of the District Judge under S. 33. The District Judge may also make an order under S. 43 regulating the conduct or proceeding of any guardian appointed or declared by the Court. But he cannot deal with the minor's property and do every thing which the guardian might do. Besides cancelling an instrument executed by the latter, he has no power to declare that the cancellation of the lease already executed is to take effect from a certain date and that it shall be valid till that date arrives (Niamatullah, J.) KUNDAN LAL v. BHAGWATI SARAN. 57 All. 485=1934 A.L.J. 1208=153 I.C. 348—7 R A. 486=4 A.W.R. 893=A.I R. 1934 All. 1043.

In ordinary cases it is for the transferee to prove that a loan taken by a guardian of the Hindu minors who constitute a joint family was for the purpose of family necessity. But once the loan is taken with the sanction of the District Judge, the burden of proof would change, and if the minors come to avoid the transfer, then it will be for them to show that the transfer is not binding upon them. Where, however, the mortgagees, fully knowing the terms of the order of the District Judge under which the guardian has been permitted to take a loan, grant the loan without complying with the terms of such order, it is not open to them to claim any benefit which they would have been entitled to otherwise because of the sanction given to the guardian. In such circumstances, the mortgagees, in order to establish the fact that the mortgage deed is binding on the minors, have to show that the loan was taken for family necessity. Where the executive claims to detain a subject under statutory powers, it must satisfy the Court that the circumstances, in which the statute lays down that such powers can be exercised, in fact exist. But in the case of a detention under the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, S. 2 (1) of which provides that the opinion of the Local Government whether or not there were reasonable grounds for making an order under the section should be conclusive, the Court has no power to go behind the order of detention and enquire into the sufficiency of the grounds for making the order of detention. 58 I.A 169, Foll.; (1931) A.C. 662, Dist. HIGHWAY—Dedication—Cul de sac—Private land becoming public street—Proof.

Before private land can become a public street or passage, it must be made so by statute or be dedicated specifically by the owner to the use of the public or there must be circumstances from which such dedication can be presumed. Dedication may be inferred from user by the public but it is difficult, if not impossible, to establish a public right of way over a cul de sac by evidence of user alone without proof that public money has been spent on it. A public highway must prima facie lead from one public place to another. A cul de sac may be a public highway, but its dedication will not be presumed from mere public user without evidence of expenditure on the place in dispute for repairs, lighting or other matters by the public authority. (English cases discussed.) (*Lort Williams and S. K. ———Essentials of—Cul de sac—Land with access from public place at one end only—If highway—Long user and maintenance at public expenses—Inference.

It is not an invariable rule that a public highway must be a thoroughfare in the sense that it must begin from and end in a public place. That is no doubt usual in most cases, but is not a sine qua non. There is no rule that a cul de sac cannot be a public highway, If there is access from a public place at one end only, there is no reason why a piece of ground could not, on that ground, be a public place, if the evidence supports the case of its dedication to public use. In the case of a cul de sac, the mere fact of long user will not justify the Court to infer dedication. The Court would require some additional evidence to support the claim of the public The fact that the cul de sac has been maintained and repaired at public expense is a very cogent piece of evidence. ———Obstruction—Right of action—Special damage —Immediate access to private property—Blocking of.

The rule requiring special damage in cases of obstruction to a public highway is qualified in cases where the plaintiff complains of an interference with his beneficial enjoyment of property thereby. A right of immediate access from private property to public highway or vice versa is a private right distinct from the rights of the owner of the property to use the highway itself as one of the public, the violation or infringement of which would furnish a cause of action in respect of an obstruction on the public way, without any further proof of special damage. 9 M. 463; 7 C.P.L.R. 97 (Civ); 2 B. 257. HIGHWAY—Obstruction—Right of action—Special damage not established—Proper Procedure—Representative suit.

The predecessor-in interest of the plaintiff made a grant of certain lands for construction of roads for the use of the public, reserving the right to resume them when they would be no longer required for purposes of roads. Roads were thereafter constructed on those lands and were being used by the public. The defendant let out portions of these roads to the other defendants for the construction of certain huts. In a suit by the plaintiff for removal of the obstruction and for restoration of the lands to their former condition for the purposes of the road, held, the plaintiff would be hit by S. 91 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as the acts committed by the defendants amount to public nuisance. He, being one of the members of the public, is equally affected by the obstruction with other members of the public. He has suffered no special damage, His claim is not in respect of a wrong to him individually. He is one of the numerous persons affected by the obstruction and therefore, having the same interest in the matter. Consequently, the proper course for him was to bring a representative suit in conformity with the provisions of O. 1, R. 8 C. P. Code. ———Adoption—Ante-adoption agreement — Arrangement embodied in a will executed by adoptive father—Disposition in favour of widow—Right of adopted son.

A Hindu adopted a son subject to the condition that the adoptive father P would continue in exclusive possession of the whole property during his lifetime. This condition along with certain others relating to the disposition of property after the adoptive father's death were embodied in a will executed by him, on the eve of adoption. P during his lifetime parted with the bulk of her property leaving a small portion in the possession of his widow. This property was claimed by the plaintiff as in his capacity as the adopted son of P. The suit was resisted on the ground that under the terms of the will, the plaintiff was only entitled to possession subject to good behaviour towards the adoptive mother.

Held, P, as a member of the coparcenary, was incompetent to make a valid disposition of the co parcenary property so as to come into effect after his death, to the prejudice of the plaintiff, who by adoption became entitled to all the rights of a co-parcener in the family. P's will could have no validity since co-parcener's power of alienation which is founded on his right to partition dies with him so as to vest his interest by survivorship in his co-owner. At the moment of a co-parcener's death, there remains nothing upon which his will can operate. So the plaintiff's rights as a son were not prejudiced by P's will in any way. The conditions as to good behaviour of the plaintiff after P's death must also lapse along with the will, as the will itself was void and inoperative. (Niyogi, A.J.C.) MST. ———Adoption—Ante adoption agreement—Bequest to widow and daughter—Consent of natural father—Effect.

When an adoption is made prior to disposition by will taking effect, the rights following from the adoption take precedence of the disposition. An arrangement made for the benefit of the widow, however, which is consented to by the natural father before the adoption can be enforced on the ground of custom. Thus a bequest of the movables and outstandings to the widow by the person making the adoption is valid, though a similar disposition in favour of his daughter may not be valid. 50 Mad. 508 (P.C.), Cons. ———Adoption—Ante-adoption agreement—Disposition of properties in favour of adopter's dependents—Ratification by adopted son—Binding nature of.

A disposition by way of bequest by a Hindu of portions of the family property in favour of his deceased brother's widow for life with remainder absolutely to her daughter can be ratified by, and if ratified will be binding on, the adopted son, when it is found that this and other dispositions of the family property were made in pursuance of an arrangement made by the adoptive father with the natural father of the boy, whom he wished to adopt, in consideration of the adoption and it is also found that the adopted son has ratified all the other dispositions forming part of the same arrangement and has not questioned the disposition in dispute for a period of more than twenty years after attaining majority. The decision in Krishnamurti v. Krishnamurti, 50 Mad. 508 (P.C.), only lays down that a disposition beyond certain limits is invalid as against the adopted son who cannot be bound by the doctrine of "approbate and reprobate". But it is independent of the question of ratification and the rule enunciated in Ramaswami Aiyan v. Venkatarama Aiyan, 2 M. 91 (P.C.), still holds good that invalid dispositions by an adoptive father at the time of the adoption and in consideration of it may become binding on the adopted son, if he subsequently ratifies them. The arrangement between the adoptive father and the natural father disposing of the father's family property is "void" against the adopted son; it is not an agreement funditu null incapable of producing any legel result; it is still so far capable of legal results as to be capable of ratification, when the adopted son comes of age. Ratification in this connection need not necessarily be accompanied by all the ingredients of a valid contract between the adopted son and the party benefited by the invalid disposition. Any act, amounting to an election on his part to hold it good, is sufficient for the purpose. Held, that the defendant would be bound by the agreement made by him on adoption, he being a major at the time, and if the suit had been brought by the person with whom the agreement had been made, the suit would succeed. As plaintiff was not a party to the contract, she could not sue unless a trust was created in her favour or a family settlement was arrived at under which she could claim. There was no trust here and no family settlement, as the plaintiff who was only the daughter's daughter had no right in the family property, not even a right of maintenance and unless the parties to the family arrangement had an interest in the property, it could not be a family arrangement. 40 Bom. 668, Dist. As regards "giving in adoption", it is the established law, (1) that the father or in his absence, the mother of the boy and no other person possesses the legal right of giving him in adoption, (2) that the expression "giving in adoption" only means "decision to give in adoption" by the exercise of the discretion of accepting the proposal of the adoptive father, to give the boy in adoption to him, and (3) that the performance of the formal act of physical delivery of the boy may be delegated by his parents to suitable persons, but not the power of decision to give away the boy in adoption. All that the law thus requires is that the secular act of gift should be completed by the father or mother, but the physical act of giving the child in religious ceremony of adoption may be vicariously performed by a delegate. 7 Mad. 548 and 8 Bom.H.C R. 244, Ref. The fiction of adoption operating as civil death in the natural family and new birth in the adoptive family has been extended both ways to the extent that the adopted son is to be treated as having been born from his birth in the adoptive family and as having never been in his natural family. But both ways, the fiction cannot be literally applied. If the Upanayanam is performed in the natural family, it is not annulled on account of the adoption. The natural tie, so far as the prohibition of marriage is concerned, is not annulled and the natural relationship is recognized for the purpose of prohibiting marriages within the sapinda relationship in the natural family. The issue born to a man before adoption, remains in the natural family and does not go with the father in the adoptive family. Lastly, adoption, it is true, dates back to the date of the death of the adoptive father but the rights of the adopted son come into existence on the date of his adoption for purposes of limitation. HINDU LAW—Adoption—Issue of adoptee.

The practice of illatom adoption among the Reddys, Kapus and Kammas of the Madras Presidency, though opposed to the strict rules of Hindu Law, has nevertheless been recognized as valid by custom. The object is temporal, not spiritual. Since it is a departure from the Hindu Law, it lies upon the party claiming to override the provisions of Hindu Law to strictly substantiate his claim. To constitute a person an illatom, a specific agreement is necessary. It is not sufficient merely to show he lived in his father-in law's house, assisted his widow or managed the properties. Further, even where an illatom adoption has taken place, it does not as a matter of fact (law?) follow that in every case the adopted son takes the place of the natural son in every respect. What his rights should be in regard to the properties of his father in-law is a matter of agreement between the parties and has to be set up and proved in each case. 4 Mad. 272; 26 I. An illatom son in-law is not a coparcener with his father. He is not thus on the same footing as a son born. The descendants of an illatom son-in law cannot, therefore, claim, as a matter of law and apart from proof of custom, rights of collateral inheritance in preference to the reversioners of the last male-holder of an estate. HINDU LAW—Adoption—Kritrima form.

Kritrima form.

———Adoption—Kritrima form—Incidents—Proof of nature of adoption.

In the kritrima form of adoption, the consent of the adoptee is necessary. The Hindu Law does not prescribe any age of majority, so all that is necessary is that the adoptee should be acquainted with the merit of performing the obsequies to his adopter and with the sin of omitting them and this is achieved when a boy attains his years of discretion. A minor who has attained years of discretion can be adopted in the kritrima form if the parents of the minor consent to the adoption. Such an adoption can be made by the husband or wife, or jointly by both. The kritrima adoption is made with the express object that the adoptee should perform the exequial rites of the adopter and that he should inherit the properties of the adopter. When the word 'kartaputra' is used by people in Mithila, it may be taken to refer to kritrima and not dattaka adoption.

The main purpose of adoption is the due performance of obsequial ceremonies and the oblations of food and water given in sraddhas and such other rites for the benefit of the adopter's soul and the perpetuation of his lineage. If the existence of a son incompetent to perform such religious ceremonies and sacrifices is treated as a bar to an adoption, one of the aforesaid main purposes which necessitate an adoption becomes frustrated. Capacity to inherit and capacity to perform obsequial ceremonies are not the same thing and a person who is excluded from inheritance as disqualified heir may nevertheless be competent to perform obsequial ceremonies and the existence of such a son may be held to be a bar to an adoption by the father. But the existence of a son who is not only disqualified for inheritance but also incompetent to perform the aforesaid ceremonies should be deemed to bear only the semblance of a son and is no bar to an adoption by the father, who can very well be treated as sonless for the purpose of making an adoption. Assent of Sapindas.

———Adoption—Widow—Assent of sapindas—Bona fides—Presumption.

When assent necessary to make an adoption valid is given by a person who is competent to give it, the presumption is that it was given bona fide. Where corrupt motive is alleged with regard to the action of one giving such assent, the question to be considered is: Is there any basis in a particular case for inferring that such person was actuated by any corrupt or improper motives in the giving of his assent? If his assent was procured by payment of any money consideration to him, it would certainly be tainted with corruption. But where no such suggestion has been made, the mere fact that in giving the assent to the adoption, his son would be benefited, cannot be twisted for the purpose of showing that the motive for giving the consent is an improper one. In giving or withholding their consent to a proposed adoption by a Hindu widow, it is the duty of the sapindas, who are to be regarded as a family council, the natural guardians of the widow and the protectors of her interests, to form an honest and intelligent judgment on the advisability or otherwise of the proposed adoption in and with reference to, the widow's branch of the family. Where one of two sapindas, whose consent is sought, refused to consent to the adoption, being actuated by purely personal motives, his dissent may be disregarded; and if the only other sapinda in the same degree accords a bona fide consent, the adoption made with such consent is valid. The mere fact that the proposed adoptee happens to be a son of the consenting sapinda is no ground for holding that he is

All that is necessary is that there should be such evidence of consent as would show that the widow in making the adoption was not acting improperly or capriciously or from a corrupt motive. If she is able to show that there was a preponderance of opinion among the reversioners in favour of the adoption she must be taken to have done all that is required under the law to make the adoption valid. HINDU LAW—Adoption—Widow.

In support of an adoption by a Hindu widow it was alleged that her husband shortly before his death called his agnates together, and pointing out that his wife who was pregnant might give birth to girl, asked them to be so kind, if one of them should be blessed with a son to give that boy in adoption so that his line may be perpetuated. Twenty years after the death of her husband, the agnates executed a deed of authority and in pursuance of that the widow adopted a boy. At the time of adoption, there was living a son born to the daughter of the deceased by his first wife. At the time of the adoption, the ancestral estate amounted to nearly 51 acres, but within seven years of that, i.e., when the adoptee became of age there were left only 7 acres, the rest having been alienated to the natural father and other relations of the adoptee.

Held, that apart from the incredibility of the story recited in the deed of authority to adopt, the motives of the parties were corrupt and capricious, that the adoption was really intended to enable the widow to dispose of the property and that it was therefore invalid. Held that the word Khandan was used by the testator in a general sense as applying to blood relations of the ladies named that the boy adopted fell within the prohibited clause and that the adoption was invalid. The view of the High Court that in the case of a Hindu his 'khandan' consists of his lineal ascendants and descendants and his collaterals in the male line, and that sisters and daughters after marriage are transplanted from the family and acquired the lineage or gotra of their husbands and the adopted son is not a 'khandanirishtadar' of the widow, was disaproved as the effect of such a construction would be to prohibit the adoption of agnates of the testator's own family. A widow in the Bombay Presidency may adopt a son to her deceased husband, although by so doing she would defeat an estate other than her own. Her power of adoption does not depend on the question of vesting or divesting of the estate. A widow who has no authority from her husband may adopt a son to him without the consent of his kinsmen the validity of an adoption cannot be impugned on the ground that she acted from an improper motive and not with a view to confer spiritual benefit upon her husband. ———Adoption—Widow—Bombay School—Rule that adoption should only be made to the last male-holder.

With reference to the rule that an adoption can only be made to the last male owner, there is a difference in the Bombay Presidency between the power of adoption by a widow in a joint family and that by a widow of a separated member or a person who is not a member of a joint family. The rule does not apply to co-parcenary property, as a widow in a joint family can adopt with the authority of her husband till the joint family subsists and before the death of the last surviving co-parcener leaving a widow to continue the line by adoption. In the case of a separated member, the rule that an adoption can be made to the last male-holder is modified so as to allow adoption by a mother succeeding as heir to her son who died without leaving any heir except herself or an adoption by a grandmother where the estate has passed directly from her husband to her grandson and has devolved on her directly from the grandson without the intervention of any other heir. The rule has been applied even in cases where the adopting widow has got the estate vested in her by inheritance as in the case of a grandmother, when the estate has not gone directly from her husband to the grandson and come back directly to her or a step-mother or a widow of a gotraja sapinda but the adoption was held invalid on the ground that the power of adoption came to an end and became incapable of being revived. The question in each case is whether the power of adoption is in abeyance or merely suspended or is at an end and has become incapable of being revived. 22 B. 551 (F.B.); 23 B. 327; 28 Bom.L.R. 1188; ibid. 1254; ibid. 1446; 30 Bom.L.R. 859; 19 B. 331; 44 B. 207, 48 B. 559; 26 B. 526; 52 B. 393; 32 B. 499, 33 Bom.L.R. 1225, Ref. Capacity to take.

———Adoption—Widow—Capacity to take—Widow being minor—Requisites of valid adoption.

The primary requisite for the validity of an adoption by a minor widow is that she is of an age to comprehend the nature of the adoption as to its spiritual import and as to its effect on her civil rights, and her act is the result of a deliberate choice based upon complete information respecting her rights and the disinterested advice of her elders. Neither the spiritual benefit nor the legal rights and obligation can flow from an adoption unless there is gift and acceptance. Among all classes, gift and acceptance are indispensable to the validity of the adoption. The essence of the adoption lies in the secular act of giving and receiving; if so, the adoption must be judged in the light of those legal considerations, which arise in case of any secular form of gift. Acceptance of the gift of a person inviolves the surrender of civil rights by the accepting widow. It is therefore analogous to the acceptance of an onerous gift and if such a gift is accepted by one who is a minor, a heavy burden lies on the person who derives benefit from it, of proving that the minor was fully informed of the nature and effect of the acceptance of the gift and that the act was the result of a spontaneous desire or the disinterested advice of elders. The widow when she made the adoption was 15 years 11 months 5 days old. The widow's father who acted as her guardian executed the adoption deed but was indebted to the father of the adopted son. He was however withheld from the witness-box. The widow's mother-in-law was all along challenging the adoption. The father of the adopted boy was appointed his guardian under somewhat suspicious circumstances.

Held, that under the circumstances the adoption could not be held to be valid. 7 Bom.H,C.R. ———Adoption—Widow—Power to adopt—Determination of last surviving owner leaving widow—Authority of another widow in the joint family—Adoption by junior widow subsequent to adoption by senior widow—Validity of.

In the event of the last surviving owner of the property leaving a widow to continue the line by means of an adoption, the power of adoption of any other widow in the joint family is extinguished and will never afterwards be revived. (Case law and the principles underlying them analysed and exhustively discussed by Tyabji J.) Chennappa and Rudrappa were undivided brothers. Chennappa died on 5th January, 1914, leaving instructions with Rudrappa to give his senior widow R a share of the properties and authorizing R to adopt a son. Rudrappa died on April, 26, having in pursuance of his brother's instructions made an oral will giving his own widow K a half-share and the widows of his deceased R (the senior) and N (the junior) the other half. On May 13, 1914, all the widows came together and divided the properties; K took one-half and R and N one fourth each. On May 15, K adopted S and R adopted C and on May 20, N adopted M. In a suit by S impeaching the validity of the adoptions of C and M,

Held, (i) that the instructions left by Chennappa did not amount to a partition as they contained no clear and unequivocal intimation to that effect;

(ii) that though the power to adopt given to R could have been exercised by her during the lifetime of Rudrappa, it could not be exercised after Rudrappa left a widow to continue the line. The fact that the adoption by R divested the estate of none else except herself did not validate the adoption because "the test as to the validity of an adoption is not merely whether the adoption does or does not divest the estate of any other person but also involves the question whether the power of adoption of the widow is merely suspended or is at an end and has become incapable of being revived." The power to adopt having, in the present case, come to an end on the death of Rudrappa, was incapable of being revived. (46 C. 749, Doubt.).

(iii) That the adoption of M was invalid in any event as an adoption made by a junior widow after the senior widow had made an adoption to their husband ;

(iv) That though the partition as between the widows would not be binding on the plaintiff (S), the oral will of Rudrappa which, on a proper construction, conferred an absolute estate on the widows of Chennappa, was binding on the plaintiff as having been made by his father prior to his adoption. ———Adoption—Widow—Power to adopt—Divesting of estate already vested.

In a joint Hindu family which has ceased to exist, a widow who succeeds direct to the last male holder retains her power of adoption in tact; but if she succeeds on the termination of an intermediate estate, her power of adoption comes to an end as soon as the estate vests in the immediate heir other than herself. An adoption by such a widow is invalid and cannot operate to divest the heir of the last surviving coparcener who has succeeded already to the full ownership of the property.

be in itself the test of the continuance or extinction of the power of adoption. No doubt the interposition of a grandson, or the son's widow, brings the mother's power of adoption to an end, but the mere birth of a son does not do so. This is not based upon a question of vesting or divesting of property. The true reason is that where the duty of providing for the continuance of the line for spiritual purposes which was upon the father, and was laid by him conditionally upon the mother, has been assumed by the son and by him passed on to a grandson or to the son's widow, the mother's power is gone. But if the son dies sonless and unmarried, the duty will still be upon the mother, and the power in her which was necessarily suspended during the son's lifetime will revive. Meaning of the expression "full legal capacity to continue the line" considered.

Ascetic.

In order that the adoption of asceticism may operate as civil death and have the effect of opening the succession to his property, it is necessary to show absolute abandonment by him of all secular property and a complete and final withdrawal from earthly affairs. The mere fact that he has gone through the necessary ceremonies, by which he became a sanyasi, is no proof of renunciation of worldly affairs, especially in a case where before becoming a sanyasi, he executed a will which was to take effect from the date of his death and not from the date of his renunciation and which provided that during his lifetime he would retain control of his property. Renunciation in order to amount to civil death must be a complete and final withdrawal from earthly affairs. A person who gives up all connection with worldly affairs and all right to property, but who subsequently resiles from that attitude and returns to live with the family cannot be held to have renounced the world or to be deemed civilly dead. A man does not become civilly dead merely because he leaves his family and property. ———Conversion—Hindu convert to Christianity—Marriage with Christian—Reconversion to Hinduism and marriage with Hindu—Validity—Sense of the community.

A Hindu by birth became a convert to Christianity and married a Christian woman, but subsequently ceased to live with her as husband and wife. He got himself reconverted to Hinduism and married another woman who too was a convert to Hinduism. There was evidence of prevalence of unions among the members of the community to which he belonged without much regard to their religious beliefs or opinions and conversion and reconversion among them were a simple affair. There was no evidence that any particular expiatory ceremonies are observed amongst them. The Smrithi writers have prescribed no particular expiatory ceremonies in the matter of changing their religion. The community regarded the reconverted couple as husband and wife and their issue as legitimate.

Held, that in view of these circumstances and having regard to the sense of the community which was prepared to treat the couple as man and wife, the couple must be regarded as having become Hindus at the time of the marriage, which must be regarded as valid. ———Conversion—Law applicable—Right of manager to contract debts—Whether continues after conversion.

Upon the conversion of a Hindu to Christianity the Hindu Law ceases to have any continuing obligatory force upon the convert and he may either renounce the old law or abide by it. It is a question of fact whether he continues to abide by those rules. The right of the managing member of a joint family to contract debts or to alienate joint family property so as to bind the other members cannot be applied to a family of non-Hindus, though the right already vested in a member before the conversion cannot be taken away by reason of such conversion. Where plaintiff sued defendants 1 and 4 on a promissory note executed by defendants 2 and 3 who were the sons of defendant 1 and it was stated that though Christians the 1st defendant and his sons had been living jointly as members of one family but not as members of a Hindu joint family but that it was not known when the members of the family became converts and there was no proof that the family continued to adopt the incidents of a Hindu joint family.

Held, that the law applicable to Hindu joint family was not applicable so as to render the non-executants liable on the note. (Sundaram Chetty and Pandurang Row, JJ.) MUHAMMAD ALIYAR ROWTHER v. GNANA AMMAL. 150 I.C. 91=6 R.M. 684=39 L.W. 551=A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 327=66 M.L.J. 671.

Where the adoptive mother of a minor borrowed money pledging some jewels as security for the loan, in a suit instituted to enforce the liability of the minor regarding the loan, the plaintiff would have to show, besides proving the truth of the loan, that the amount was really borrowed for legal and justifiable purposes as would bind the minor and that the debt had been kept alive at the date of the suit by any payments or acknowledgments recognized by law. The fact that the lender took certain jewels as security for the loan would render it unlikely that he would have cared to make an enquiry about the necessity for the loan. Where, therefore, in a suit on a mortgage executed by the father, the sons successfully impeach the mortgage and a simple money decree is passed against the father, the decree is binding on the father and can be executed by attachment of the joint family property belonging to him and the sons. ———Debts—Father—Mortgage debt—Mortgage decree against father—Sale of coparcenary property.

The basic principle of the Hindu law that it is the pious duty of the sons to pay off the farher's debts if they have not been incurred for immoral purposes stands absolutely apart from the restrictions placed by Hindu Law on the power of alienation by the 'karta' of a joint Hindu family. The pious duty of the sons to pay the father's debts will override all the other considerations, which concern the general power of 'karta'. Therefore in proposition No. 2 in 1924 P.C. 50, by the word 'debt', their Lordships meant all debts and not purely unsecured money transactions. Hence in a case where the father raises a debt (whether it be secured or unsecured), the coparcenary property belonging to the joint family consisting of the father and his sons can be brought to sale for the discharge of the debt irrespective of the procedure, that is to say, whether it is sold in execution of a simple money decree or under a mortgage decree under O. 34, C.P. Code. The only objection the sons can take to it is that the debt is tainted with immorality. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, A.J.C.) SHIV DAS v. KIRPAL SINGH. 7 R. If a loan is taken by the Karta of a joint family for the purposes of the family, the members of the family are bound to pay the loan to the extent of the joint family property. The son has a further liability. He is liable, even if the loan be not for purposes of the family or either advanced without making proper enquiries, so long as the debt is not tainted with immorality. But in both cases, the liability is limited to the extent of the family assets in the hands of the member or the son, as the case may be. Even the son is not personally liable. ———Debts—Father—Son's liability—Pious obligation of son—Nature and extent of liability—Rights of creditor.

A Hindu son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debts which are not tainted with illegality or immorality. It is a duty which arises even in the father's lifetime and is incumbent not only on the son and grandson, but also on the great-grandson, and can be enforced. As long as a father remains undivided, a creditor can proceed against the interest of the son in the joint family property for the personal debts of the father not contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose. He can, during the father's lifetime, enforce his claim by a decree against the entire family property. A subsequent suit can be maintained against the sons, if they have not been impleaded in the previous suit against the father in respect of the same debt. The son's liability is, however, not a personal liability. It is limited to the son who is joint with the father and it is limited to his interest in the co-parcenary property, and it subsists so long as the liability of the father subsists. It would cease on the debt becoming time barred against the father. It is not a joint or a joint and several liability as understood in English Law. At the same time a suit cannot be filed against the son alone. The pious obligation of the son also extends to commercial debts of the father which are valid and binding on the father, even though the trade may have been started by the father. But a Hindu son is not under any liability to pay his father's debts which are of a character falling within one or other of the exceptions recognized by the ancient smrities; that is, he is not compellable to pay "sums due by the father for spirituous liquors, for losses at play, for promises made without any consideration, or under the influence of lust or wrath, or sums for which he is a surety or for an unpaid fine or an unpaid toll," or for any other debt which comes under the expression "Avyavaharika". If at the time of the partition there is an honest division of the net assets only, after making full provision for the payment of all the just debts of the father, it is difficult to hold that the sons have not discharged their pious obligation. If the sons have provided for the payment, it ought to be as good as their actual discharge. There being no charge or lien on account of the simple debts, it would be against all principles of equity, justice and good conscience and certainly not authorized by any known Hindu Law text, if the sons were to be called upon to pay the debts a second time. ———Debts—Husband—Right of widow's maintenance—Subject to payment of husband's debts—Debts of other co parceners—Distinction.

When the husband of a widow claiming a right of maintenance or residence, makes an alienation of his property or incurs debt, his widow is not entitled to claim maintenance out of the property transferred or attached in execution of a decree, unless such property has already been charged with her maintenance. Debts contracted by a Hindu take precedence over the maintenance of his widow as a charge on the estate. Therefore a purchaser of property sold to discharge debts of a husband has a good title against a widow who seeks to charge the estate with her maintenace (unless this has been already done) or who claims a right of residence therein. The case is however different if the debts are those of another co-parcener such as a son or brother of the widow's deceased husband. In that case the widow would be entitled to enforce her right of residence against property sold to pay off the debts, unless it were proved that they had been incurred for family necessity. The test to determine whether the suretyship is for payment or for honesty is whether the act gives rise to the liability of a civil nature on the one hand or criminal or tortious on the other. Surety for the loss which arises from misconduct, namely, dishonesty of the servant cannot imply a civil liability on the part of the surety to compensate for the loss and therefore not a surety of payment. Any liability incurred by the surety in consequence of dishonesty of the principal debtor (in this case misappropriation of his master's money) cannot therefore be enforced against his widow. Interest.

———Debts—Interest—Father's debt—High rate of interest—Necessity for—Onus—Relief to son.

Per Patkar, J.—The antecedent debt of the father occupies the same place as necessity in the case of an alienation by the father of joint family property. If the antecedent debt does not carry compound interest at quarterly rests, the question as to the power of the father to alienate joint family property not only to the extent of the antecedent debt but also to the extent of compound interest with annual rests will resolve itself into the question whether it was necessary for the father to stipulate for compound interest with annual rests, while encumbering the joint family property for an antecedent debt. So to this limited extent the question of necessity falls to be considered. The onus is on the lender to prove that the necessity demanded borrowing on such terms. In the absence of evidence that the money could not be raised at less interest and if it appears that the interest charged is in excess of commercial rates, the lender must be considered not to have discharged the onus. In such a case, the Court has the power to relieve the joint estate from the burden of excessive rate of interest. P, a Sudra governed by the Benares School of Hindu Law, had one legitimate daughter and seven illegitimate sons. His property was self-acquired. He executed an indenture, by which he retained some property for himself and his daughter and transferred the remaining property absolutely to his sons. By the terms of the deed, his sons personally covenanted to discharge the debts af P and not to make any claim on the property retained by P and that they as would, between themselves, continue as an undivided family, etc. The sons later on partitioned the estate and the plaintiff, a son of one of the seven illegitimate sons of P was born after the partition and sued for a declaration that the intenture was binding on the parties thereto, that they had no right to partition the estate and that he was entitled to a share of the properties as a coparcener.

Held, the indenture embodied a family arrangement which affected an out-and-out transfer to the sons as joint owners, it was not a gift, the terms of the covenant were inconsistent with the notion of a coparcenary, the sons were competent by mutual consent to divide the properties among themselves and the plaintiff had no right as a coparcener to impugn the partition ; or to claim any interest in those properties. Two brothers forming a joint Hindu family executed a document which provided that on the death of one of the brothers, his widow should have a right to the profits in a moiety of the joint family property with an estate equivalent in some respects to that of a widow of a sonless and separated Hindu, but that the widow was to have no right either to the possession or to the partition of the property which was to remain in the possession and management of the surviving brother. There was no mention nor any indication in the document, that the estate which was intended to be granted to the widow was in lieu of maintenance. There was no clause in the document providing for the defeasance of the estate upon the happening of subsequent unchastity.

Held, that the estate granted to the widow was anomalous in character and not a maintenance grant or widow's estate and there being no express or implied condition restricting her rights in that respect, it was not open to the surviving coparcener to import a condition of continued chastity as a requisite to her rights under the deed. Family arrangement is founded on the assumption that there was some antecedent title of some kind between the parties and the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title was. All that is necessary is that each party must intend to press his claims to the property by litigation or otherwise, and the fact, that the claim of one of the parties might if pressed in a Court of Law prove unfounded, will not invalidate a family arrangement if it is otherwise brought about in good faith. The donor did not intend that the property should go to another family but should continue as long as possible in the hands of her daughters and the survivors of them and it could not have been in contemplation that either of the daughters would be at liberty so to dispose of her share of the property in her lifetime as to defeat the intention expressed in the last clause. Then followed certain restrictive conditions and a defeasance clause. Subsequently the Raja executed two more deeds very much in the same terms in favour of his daughter but in these two deeds she was expressly constituted 'malik'.

Held, the word 'malik' in the last two leases and the words of gift in the first lease conferred on the daughter an absolute estate not cut down into a life-estate by any of the conditions that followed. 49 I.A. 1; 57 I. But where the grant of an absolute estate is expressly or impliedly made subject to defeasance on the happening of a contingency and where the effect of such defeasance would not be a violation of any rule of law, the original estate is curtailed and the gift over must be taken to be valid and operative." 63 M.L.J. 911, applied. If the gift over is to take effect, the terms of the bequest taken as a whole must not confer an absolute estate on the first donee; for if the further interests are given merely after or on termination of the first donee's interest, the absolute interest is not cut down and the further interest will fail. Under the Hindu Law, no writing is necessary for a gift but the gift must be accompanied by delivery of the subject of the gifts from the donor to the donee. The mere registration of the deed of gift is not delivery of possession. Where the donor is guardian of the donee, the Court should presume that the continuous possession of the subject of gift by the former is realiy for the benefit and in trust for the latter. Where there is clear evidence of intention on the part of the donor to make over the property to the donee and there is no trace or evidence of intention of any kind to revoke the gift and the donor continued to manage the property and there is nothing to show that he was not doing so for the donee, it is a fair presumption that he was acting on behalf of the donee and the fact that there was no actual transfer of possession is immaterial. 3 C.L.R. 247, 39 M.L.J. 263 (P.C.), Foll. In the present case the mortgage was for a period of five years and there was therefore no pressure to sell the properties within a few months from the date of the mortgage. Though there was necessity for the earlier mortgage, there was no necessity for the subsequent sale. Secondly the widow was not in possession of the property as her husband's heir but as guardian of her minor sons. These two circumstances distinguish the present case from the Privy Council cases. Held, that if no supplementary decree under O. 34, R. 6, C. P. ———Impartible estate—Joint family—Jointness and separation—Burden of proof—Remoteness of common ancestor or separation in worship—Effect of.

In order to establish that an impartible estate has ceased to be joint family property for the purposes of succession, it is necessary to prove an intention expressed or implied on behalf of the junior members of the family to give up their chance of succession to the impartible estate. It is incumbent upon a claimant to an impartible estate to establish only a notional jointness, with the burden on the opposite party to show a definite renunciation of their right to succession. The burden lies heavily on the opposite side to establish that the estate was held as the separate property of the Raja and that a separation had been brought about by an intention express or implied on the part of the junior branch to relinquish their right to succession to the impartible estate, whenever a succession opened. Mere remoteness of the common ancestor or the separation in worship does not imply any intention on the part of the junior members to give up their right of succession to the estate. Withdrawal by the Raja from social inter course with a junior branch may be regarded in the same way, A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 216 and A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 68, Rel. on. ———Impartible estate—Joint family—Separation—Evidence of.

Both in the case of an ordinary joint undivided Hindu family and in the case of an ancestral impartible estate, to constitute separation there must be a clear and unambiguous declaration by a member of his intention to separate himself from the family. The separation must be a complete separation in worship, in food and in estate, and it is not sufficient to show a separation merely in food and worship. In order to establish that in a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara an ancestral impartible estate has ceased to be joint family property for the purpose of succession, it is necessary to prove an intention, express or implied, on the part of the junior members of the family, to renounce their right of succession to the impartible estate. In the case of a joint Hindu family possessed of an ancestral impartible Raj, every son acquires by birth a right to the estate and becomes a member of the family with the holder of the estate. But for the custom of impartibility, a junior member would be entitled to all the rights of a member of a joint family, which the Hindu Law gives him including the right to demand partition and to participate in the enjoyment of the income of the estate. The custom does not supersede the general law, so far as his status is concerned, though his right to demand partition and to participate in the income of the estate is taken away. Where he is entitled by custom to maintenance out of the income of the estate, he is to that extent entitled to participate in the enjoyment of the undivided estate. ———Joint family—Alienation—"Benefit to estate"—Meaning of—Sale for higher price than market value—If justified.

The term "benefit to estate", as justifying an alienation by a Hindu manager of the property of a minor, does not mean or include every transaction which is advantageous or which a prudent owner would carry out in connection with his own estate. Nor is the term confined to a transaction which of a character to protect or preserve the property of the minor. The manager of a minor under the Hindu Law is not entitled to sell the minor's property merely for the purpose of enhancing the value of his property or for increasing the minor's income. The question whether a transaction is for the benefit of the estate or not involves the consideration of something more than merely whether the purchase price paid is a good price; it involves the further question of what is to be done with the purchase-money. A sale by a widow, the mother and guardian of her minor son, of his property worth Rs. 600 for Rs. 900, cannot be justified merely because the price got is greater than the price which would normally be got in the market. When there is no satisfactory evidence of the manner in which the purchase-money is to be dealt with, a sale of that character cannot be justified. Although the purpose of a transaction may be to enlarge or improve the estate, an act undertaken in a capricious and reckless manner without proper calculation of its consequences in the spirit, of wild speculation cannot be termed a "benefit" to the estate. ———Joint family—Alienation—Benefit to estate—Transfer of family property for purchase of new property nearer home.

It is now settled that a transaction entered into by the manager of a joint Hindu family to be binding on the other members need not be one which the manager is compelled to enter into as a defensive measure in order to protect the family property. There may be cases in which a transaction is so advantageous that any prudent person would certainly enter into it and in these circumstances, such a transaction would be binding upon the family as a whole. But this principle should not be extended too far. It must not be supposed that the managing member of a joint Hindu family is entitled to transfer the family property merely because he thinks that the transfer will be for the benefit of the family. Something more than that is required to make the transaction binding upon the family. It must be a transaction arising out of a situation of which no prudent person acting as manager could fail to take advantage. The manager is not entitled to speculate with the family property even if he does so in good faith believing that his conduct of affairs will ultimately be of advantage to the family. Accordingly he cannot transfer family property for the purpose of purchasing new properties nearer home even though he may hope to make a certain income out of such properties. There is no general presumption that the debt contracted by the father is beneficial to the family and binding on the sons; the benefit and necessity will have to be established by the creditor. Under Hindu Law a father's alienation cannot be attacked, if it is made to pay off antecedent debts or to raise money for legal necessity. The sons have pious duty to pay their father's debts if they were not immoral or illegal and the whole of the family property can be sold in execution of a decree passed on the basis of such debts. If the sons contend that the debts were raised for immoral purposes, it is incumbent on them to prove a clear connection between the debts and the alleged immorality. Those who support a mortgage of joint family property by the manager must prove not only that there was necessity to borrow the principal, but also that it was not unreasonable to borrow at the high rate of interest and upon the terms provided by the mortgage. If the rate of interest is exorbitantly high, and the security is ample, the Court can properly infer that it was unnecessarily high and can make a decree allowing a reduced rate. Where a mortgage deed provided 18 per cent. interest with nine monthly rests, as the security was ample the High Court in view of the long delay in bringing the suit, held that simple interest at 18 per cent per annum would be amply sufficient to compensate the mortgagee for the interest that he should get on the principal amount of the mortgage and allowed only that rate up to the date fixed for payment and 6 per cent. after that date. The Court cannot presume legal necessity for the balance of consideration when there is no evidence to prove that the lender made any bona fide enquiry as to necessity. In a case of sale, before it can be upheld, two elements must co exist, (1) the purchaser had made a bona fide enquiry; (2) and that the sale is justified by legal necessity. ———Joint family—Alienation—Manager—Mortgage—Necessity— Benefit — Satisfaction of pre emption decree.

The rule is that the family property is for the support of those who are in existence, those who are in the womb, and those who are not yet begotten, and therefore the property cannot be disposed of by the father without the consent of his sons. The same rule applies when the manager is not the father. He must have the consent of all other members of the family, in order to transfer the same, or there must be benefit to the estate by the transaction. It cannot be said that money required by the manager of a joint Hindu family, in order to pay the pre emption money and costs for the acquisition of fresh property, is in all cases without legal necessity or benefit to the family estate, and is therefore always outside the authority of the father. Nor can it be laid down, on the other hand, that every manager is entitled to borrow money in order to acquire fresh property by pre-emption. The answer to the question must depend on the special circumstances of each case. When satisfied that the acquisition was not speculative, but in the best interests of the family and for its benefit as well as for the benefit of the family estate, which an ordinary prudent manager would make, it would be open to a Court to hold that the transaction is binding on the other members of the family, even though it is nothing but the raising of a loan on a mortgage of family property for the sake of satisfying the pre-emption decree.

The term 'legal necessity' is not capable of precise definition. If the head of a joint family or for the matter of that, any member of a joint Hindu family is accused of a serious criminal charge, the costs incurred in his defence should be regarded as incurred for family necessity. The result of the prosecution, if he has ultimately been convicted, ought not to be allowed to affect the question if the costs should or should not be regarded as incurred for legal necessity. When the manager of a joint family is being prosecuted for a serious criminal charge, it is a period of distress for the whole family such as would justify a mortgage of the family property by a coparcener. So family property may be charged with a debt incurred for the purpose on defending members of a family in a criminal case. If so far as the consideration of the mortgage was borrowed for prosecuting the defence of a coparcener, it was far legal necessity but as regards the sum required for payment of the fine imposed on him, it cannot be treated as one for legal necessity. As regards necessity, for a mortgage of family property executed by a coparcener, it matters not whether there was any representation at the time; it matters not whether an enquiry was made at the time by the lender, if in fact the necessity existed, although proof of inquiry disposes of the question of necessity. It seems quite irrelevant to ascertain what was the statement made at the time, if necessity at the time is established. If a statement had been made at the time and if proper and bona fide inquiry had been made, the lender is excused from establishing that there was in fact family necessity. There was no duty cast upon the lender to ascertain who was not a member of the joint family. (Wort, J.) LACHMAN LAL v. MUNSHI MAHTON. 149 I.C. 734=6 R.P. 611=A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 708 (2).

It is the universal practice in mortgage suits that every item of consideration has to be scrutinised. As between members of a joint family, no suit for partition lies. But a member or members of a joint family may sue an alienee from a member of the joint family for his or their share of the property alienated without suing for a general partition. In so doing, they affirm the sale by the other member or members but the real basis of the rule is that as the rule against partial partition is a rule for the protection of the joint family against being harassed by multiplicity of suits at the instance of alienees from recalcitrant members. They can waive the benefit of it and bring a suit to separate themselves from the undesirable stranger. Similarly the rule against partial partition does not apply to a suit by an alienee from one member against another alienee from another member of the joint family, irrespective of the consideration as to who is the prior alienee in point of time. The right of the one alienee to sue the other follows as a corollary of the right of one member to sue the alienee for partial partition. So one alienee is entitled to bring a suit against the other for partition of those items in respect of which the contending parties to the suit are tenants in common. ———Joint family — Alienation — Setting aside—Powers of—Right of after born son to challenge—Limitation.

An alienation of joint family property made by a father, there being no male issue in existence at the date of the alienation, is valid though made without legal necessity. Such an alienation cannot be objected to by a son born after the date of alienation on the ground that it was made without legal necessity. But the alienation made by a father who has sons then living, the alienation not being one for legal necessity or for payment of an antecedent debt, is invalid if made without their consent. Such an alienation may be set aside not only at the instance of those sons but at the instance of any son born after the date of alienation, unless it was ratified by them before his birth. The cause of action in a suit to set aside the father's alienation arises when the alienee takes possession of the property. The period of 12 years is therefore to be counted from that date. That is the material date not only as regards the suit of a son in exintence at that date, but also the suit of a son not in existence at that date. The subsequent birth of the latter does not create a fresh cause of action or a new starting point from which limitation should be reckoned. Ancestral property.

———Joint family—Ancestral property—Distinction between that and joint family property—Incidents—Mitakshara and Dayabhaga—Distinction.

The two notions of joint ancestral property and joint family property are distinguishable. There must have been a nucleus of joint family property before joint ancestral property can come into existence, because "ancestral" connotes descent and therefore pre-existence. But it is not true that there can be no joint family property without a pre existing nucleus. One of the incidents of joint ancestral property is that where it is known or admitted that some at least of the property of a joint family has come down to them, the presumption is that the whole property is ancestral and any member alleging the contrary will have to prove his self acquisition. The same presumption applies also in joint family property—as distinguished from joint ancestral property. So far as the incident of the two classes of property relating to the presumption of jointness under the Hindu Law is concerned, there is no distinction in principle between Mitakshara and Dayabhaga. A joint family firm under the Hindu Law is a special form of partnership, the members of which must be the entire family or the entire members of any branch thereof. Rights of members in such a firm are rights arising out of their membership in the family and not by contract. There may be cases where all the members of a family or a branch thereof are adults when it is open to them to regulate their relationship by contract; but it is not open to some alone of the members of a joint family to enter into a partnership and impress upon it the characteristics of a joint family firm to the exclusion of others. N had 4 sons, K, R, S and V, but from 1895 carried on a business only with three of them, keeping out his eldest son K. The business was carried on as before; certain properties were purchased out of the profits of the business—not in the name of the joint family but in the name of S, V and the infant son. There was on the one hand no evidence of a separation of K from the joint family, on the other hand, he had never participated in the profits of the business. ———Joint family—Business—Newly started—Manager—Money borrowed by manager—Alienation for, if justified.

It has always been settled law that money borrowed for the purposes of an ancestral family business is per se a good justification for alienation of family property. In such a case the presumption is that the carrying on of the ancestral business is necessary and no further enquiry on the part of the creditor is required. On the other hand, the mere fact that money has been required for a business newly started by a manager or a father is not in itself sufficient to justify an alienation of the family property. But, if in addition thereto, it could be shown that there was either a pressure or necessity to continue that business, as it was the mainstay of the family or that the particular transaction was at the time beneficial to the family and the family estate, the transaction would be supported but, of course on the latter ground. The question whether the transaction was for such benefit or not is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case, and it is for the Court to decide whether it was so beneficial and was such as an ordinary prudent manager would have entered into in the interest of the family. A Hindu father and his two sons, one of whom had a minor son, started in or about 1917 a ginning factory. For the purpose of financing the ginning factory the plaintiff advanced in 1920 various sums amounting to Rs. 21,808. For that sum and for Rs. 2,516 8 0 which was due under a prior mortgage, and for Rs. 549 6 3, being cash advanced at the time, the father and the sons executed to the plaintiff in 1922 a deed of mortgage. In a suit on the mortgage for the principal and interest due,

Held, that though the business started by the father and sons was not and could not be regarded as ancestral so far as the minor son of one of the sons was concerned, yet since the greater portion of the consideration for the mortgage except the sum actually advanced at the time of the mortgage consisted of antecedent debts which were neither immoral nor avyavaharika, the mortgage must be held to be binding on such minor grandson except to the extent of the amount which was the amount of cash advanced at the time of the mortgage and was not antecedent and independent of mortgage. In a suit by the surviving brother against the defendant for his half share of the debt, and for payment of the other half to the widow of the deceased, who was also impleaded as a defendant.

Held, that the suit was maintainable and the plaintiff could recover his share of the debt, as the plaintiff was always the owner of a half-share of the debt, and required no assignment or endorsement. When a note is taken in the name of a member of a joint Hindu family, the whole family existing at the time of suit can recover the amount, as the debt belongs to the family. In such a case, the suit is really based on the debt and not on the instrument.

Held, further, that the widow of the deceased, who inherited the other half, never having been a co-plaintiff and never having applied in the lower Court for being made a co plaintiff, could not recover her half-share. Nor could a decree be granted for that portion in favour of the plaintiff, the two being tenants-in common. M's share in the joint family property was attached in execution of a decree against him in respect of his personal debts. Accordingly the Court ordered that the rights and interest of the judgment-debtor without specification of shares should be sold and that the objections be allowed to that extent. The rights and interest of M were thereafter sold and purchased by decree-holder's son,

Held, that in view of the above facts the decree-holder's son could not claim to have purchased at auction sale the entire interest of M and his three sons in the joint family property on the ground that the entire estate was liable for father's debts, as only the right and interest of M was put up for sale and purchased by the auction-purchaser. Appellant obtained a decree against the father of the respondent and in execution of that decree purchased some of the family properties in Court sale. The respondent and his father constituted a joint Hindu family. Respondent filed a suit and obtained a declaration that the decree obtained by the appellant was not binding on his half-share of the properties in the family. Pending an appeal by the appellant, respondent (minor son) died, and his mother was brought on record as his legal representative. Appellant conteded that the decree had become infructuous by the death of ths plaintiff-respondent and that his appeal should be allowed.

Held, that though it was imperative on the appellant to implead the legal representatives of the minor son when he seeks a reversal of the decree, and though his legal representatives are entitled to be heard in support of the decree, on the merits, the person who alone could have the benefit of the decree appealed from having died, the decree had become infructuous or nugatory, the appeal ought to succeed on that ground. The decree merely conferred immunity on the son's share in the family property against the adverse effects of the decree against the father; but with the death of the son, his interest in the joint family property ceased to exist. Where a decree is obtained against a Hindu father, the sons being not parties to the suit, the decree can be executed against his sons to the extent of the family property in their hands. Where a decree is obtained against a Hindu father and his sons, then, the Courts must restrict the decree, as far as the sons are concerned, to their interest in the family property. ———Joint family—Father—Power to execute trust deed—Benefit of minor.

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that in no case can a Hindu father in a joint family delegate any of his powers in the management of the family property. There might conceivably be a number of circumstances in which benefit to the family itself may require that he should himself abstain from exercising, and should delegate, some of his powers for that purpose, as for example, when the father is extravagant and thereby incurs large debts. Necessity or benefit to the minor has been regarded as a more important consideration than technical want of authority of an alienor, e.g., under the Hindu Law, even a de facto guardian of a minor can validly sell the property of the minor to a third person for legal necessity. Where a Hindu father who was found to be extravagant and incurring debts, executed a deed of trust to third persons, under which he gave up all his rights in the family property for the benefit of his minor sons then existing and to be born in future, and entrusted the family property to the possession and management of the trustees who were to pay up all the family debts by selling or mortgaging any of the family properties, maintain all the family members and incur suitable expenses for the marriage of the daughter, etc., the trust to be in existence till his death, after which the property was to be handed over to the minor sons,

Held, that the trust deed did not violate the provisions of Hindu Law, since the beneficiaries under it were the executant's family, his son, wife and daughter who were provided for by it, and that there was nothing inherently invalid in the trust deed which the father and manager had authority to execute. ———Joint family—Father—Release by—Subsequent decree against—Liability of minor son's share—Rights of creditors.

Under the Hindu Law, the only course open for the protection of minor members of a joint family from the effects of the misdeeds of their father or other elder coparcener, is either to bring about a partition or to secure a release from the misbehaving member on paying him a sum of money towards his share in the family properties. Such a transaction is no doubt open to attack by the creditors of the person who is thus separated and the creditors can insist that it must be carefully scrutinised. A release executed for an inadequate consideration may not be binding on the creditors. But the release is not on that account wholly inoperative or other than bona fide. Nor does the person executing it continue to be in a state of non division with his minor son so as to make the minor son liable for debts contracted by him after that date or to make the minor's share liable to be proceeded against in execution of decree obtained against him, in suits instituted after such release to which the minor son has not been made a party. There is a presumption that a Hindu family is joint and undivided. Where it is proved or admitted that a joint family possessed such nucleus as could lead to the acquisition in question, the acquisition may be presumed to belong to the joint family, having been acquired with the aid of the nucleus. But the mere existence of a nucleus, however small or insignificant, is not enough. ———Joint family—Joint family property—Presumption—Dayabhaga law—Jointness — Self-acquisition—Proof.

If two or more sons of a father governed by the Dayabhaga system of Hindu Law succeed to ancestral property or without possessing such property, live jointly after their father's death and acquire properties in joint names and during such state of living, other properties are acquired in the names of other members of the family, it is for such members to show that they are their self-acquisitions. There is a presumption in favour of jointness in respect of all properties acquired during joint living, when there is proof of a nucleus of ancestral property or of the existence of joint family property; and this presumption has got to be displaced by the member who alleges the property to be his separate or self-acquired property. The strength of the presumption in either case varies with the circumstances of each individual case. In some cases it may be easily displaced. For instance, where ancestral property or other joint property is shown to be inconsiderable, and the property acquired by an individual member is of considerable value, and it is shown that the earnings of that member were large, the presumption is at once displaced or rebutted. Possession of joint estate, however slight, leads to a presumption that all properties of the family, including a business carried on, started and carried on

It is no doubt true that so long as a family remains joint, any property standing in the name of a junior member will be presumed to be joint family property. But such a presumption is liable to be rebutted. The question is always one of fact. Where the family after having lost all the property separated into two branches and started on their new career without any uncleus of family property.

If there is no question of joint family between parties, the fact that the defendant's earnings were kept by the plaintiff with his own earnings would not make the coffers of the plaintiff the coffers of a joint Hindu family nor even the coffers of people who are partners in any venture. From the mere fact that the defendant's earnings are kept with the plaintiff, it would not follow as a matter of law that any purchase made by the plaintiff would also be the defendant's property. Either the family must be joint or the parties must be in the position of partners so that the act of one may be the act for all the partners and it must be further shown that in purchasing the property the plaintiff was acting as a partner of the defendant. ———Joint family—Manager—Decree against—Enforceability against interests of junior members.

A decree passed against the managing member of an undivided Hindu family in respect of a liability incurred within the scope of his authority is enforceable against the interest of the junior members in the family property, even though they had not been made parties to the suit, but such members are not precluded from contesting the authority of the manager or the nature of the debt, and this they may do either in the course of execution proceedings or in a suit of their own. There is no presumption that a debt contracted by the manager of Hindu family was contracted for family purposes and this fact must be proved by evidence. The mere circumstance that it had not been disclosed in the course of proceedings in the original suit against the managing member that the debt had been raised for family necessity, or that the decree does not show on the face of it that the judgment-debtor had been sued in his capacity as manager is not fatal to the right of the decree-holder to proceed against the entire family property. It is not the frame of the suit or the form of the decree which is conclusive of the matter, the essential point is whether in fact the debt, which is the basis of the decree, had been raised by the judgment-debtor within the scope of his authority as the manager and for the purposes of the family. This question of fact can be determined finally only after the junior members have had proper opportunity of being heard, either in the execution proceedings, or in a separate suit specially brought for the purpose. But if after hearing the junior members, the finding is that the debt satisfies the "touch-stone of necessity" and is therefore binding on them their interest in the property will be held to have passed at the sale, as effectively as if they had been made parties to the original suit. Presumption.

———Joint family—Presumption.

It is well settled that while it must be presumed that a Hindu father and his sons are members of a joint family, no presumption can be made that a family, because it is joint, possesses joint property or any property. It is only when it is established or admitted that a Hindu family living in commensality possesses joint property that the further presumption arises that all the property they are possessed of is joint. Jointness in the case of a Hindu family must be presumed until the contrary is proved The burden of proving jointness is not on the party asserting the same. The fact that certain small plots of property are separately entered in the names of two branches of the family is not sufficient to show that there was separation. Such separate entries cannot rebut the presumption of Hindu Law relating to jointness or prove separate possession by the branches or members of the family, which admittedly was joint originally. Where one member has separated from the others, the presumption that the family is joint disappears, but at the same time no contrary presumption arises that the other members have separated. In such circumstances, the question whether they are members of a joint Hindu family or not is a question dependent on proof. Where, however, a plaintiff-mortgagee from one member seeks to obtain a decree not only against the mortgagor but also the other members of the family who are not parties to the deed of mortgage alleging that the members of the family are separate and that the mortgagor is absolute owner of the property mortgaged, the burden rests on the plaintiff to prove the alleged separation, as it is an elementary principle that nobody can deprive another of property unless he can establish his own absolute title thereto and if he is a transferee he must establish not only the validity of his transfer but the title of his transferor. But the initial burden of proving that there was a family joint in estate is on the plaintiff. It is not enough for him to show living in commensality and joint worship. The intention may be expressed by words, or may be inferred by the manner in which the profits of the property were dealt with. Also, brothers living in commensality are not members of the family so as to enable the brothers to claim the self-acquisition of a brother in more affluent circumstances as acquisition of a joint family unless those other brothers proved that they had also contributed to this acquisition of the property claimed by them as acquisition of the joint family. Self-acquired property may however be thrown into the joint stock but it is necessary in such a case to prove a clear intention to waive separate rights. Where no nucleus of joint property is admitted or proved, the onus is on the party asserting that the property was not the self-acquired property of an individual member of the family.

In joint families consisting of several brothers under the Dayabhaga school of Hindu Law, where the income from the ancestral property is small, it often happens that one or two brothers, who earn considerably contribute from their earnings to the upkeep of the families of the others, whose earnings are small ; but this circumstance alone cannot lead to an inference that the brothers contributing wanted to make their acquisitions a part of the common stock. The acquisitions would remain their own. But where such earnings of one are put into the hands of one coparcener and are mixed up with his funds and joint properties are being acquired in the names of both members, there can be no doubt that the properties so acquired are joint family properties. There is no presumption, under Hindu Law that a joint family possesses joint property, but once it is admitted or proved that a family is joint and possesses joint family property, the presumption of law is that all the property they are possessed of is joint. If any member claims any portion of the property as his separate property, the burden of proof lies upon him to show that it was acquired by him, in circumstances which would constitute it as his separate property. The mere fact that it was purchased in his name and that there are receipts in his name respecting it, does not render the property his separate property, for all that is perfectly consistent with the notion of its being joint. 3 M.I.A. 229 (P.C.), Foll. Held, that the deed should be construed as a whole ; since the gift was made by a person who was in the position of a stranger to the donees and stated to be made in favour of each one of them, and further the donees and their heirs were asked to enjoy the properties, the donor intended, the donees to take the properties as tenants-in-common even though they were members of a joint family and even though it was stated that the 1st defendant. was to keep possession till his death. In order to enable a creditor of the family to follow the property in the hands of a member of the family, the binding nature of the debt must be proved in the presence of that particular member and the decree must be against him. Her right of maintenance does not make her a necessary party. The position however becomes entirely changed when the family separates. The right of the widow to whom property has been separately allotted is no longer to receive maintenance, which could have been defeated by the creditor by bringing the family property to sale. Now she being in possession of a specific portion of the family property, she is entitled to retain it unless its liability to be taken away is established against her. (Mahomed ———Joint family—Trading partnership—Adjudication of—Liability of minor members as partners and as sons.

A joint family (consisting of two fathers and several sons, some adults and some minors) along with a stranger constituted a trading partnership which was adjudicated insolvent. The minors contended that their shares in the ancestral property were not liable to discharge the debts of the firm. It was proved that the property (including the shares of minors) had been mortgaged by the fathers, for a debt of the joint family as a partner in the firm and thus treated as a part of the assets of the firm.

Held, (a) that as a result of the adjudication of the firm, all the assets of the firm vested in the receiver. The fact that the minors have not and cannot be adjudicated insolvent would not affect the vesting—in the receiver—of the entire assets of the firm including their shares in the family property, which had become part of the firm's assets. Their shares in the property which was mortgaged for a debt of the firm cannot be saved except by showing that the debts incurred by the father were immoral; (b) that, though as partners the minors were under no personal liability and no property of theirs, which was not the property of the firm, could be touched by the receiver, their liability as sons of their fathers extended to all such debts as were not shown to be immoral. Therefore a purchaser of property sold to discharge debts of a husband has a good title against a widow who seeks to charge the estate with her maintenance (unless this has been already done) or who claims a right of residence therein. The case is however different if the debts are those of another coparcener such as a son or brother of the widow's deceased husband. A Hindu widow's right of maintenance arises by marriage. It is not a matter of contract. It exists during the husband's lifetime and continues after his death. It is an obligation attached upon his person and remains the same after his death. Though the estate of a deceased Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law may be under an obligation for the maintenance of his widow, it does not follow that a simple creditor of the widow who has paid her money for maintenance can insist on getting possession of and on retaining the estate till the amount due to him is paid off. The position of a person advancing money to a widow for her maintenance during her lifetime or spending money for her funeral expenses after her death, is no better than that of an unsecured creditor. A father-in-law who is not possessed of ancestral property is not legally bound to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law. She has no claim against his self-acquired property. But the father-in-law is under a pious or moral obligation to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law, which ripens into a legal and binding obligation on the heirs, who inherit the property of the father-in-law. This legal obligation is as much binding on the sons and heirs as on the devisees under a will executed by the father-in-law. 25 Bom. 263, Not Foll.; 11 All. 194 (F.B.), Foll. (Staples, A.J.C.) MT. ———Marriage — Restitution of conjugal rights—Suit for, by husband—Defence—Actual cruelty need not be established—Fraud in getting himself married—Effect of.

Suits for restitution of conjugal rights are not contemplated by Hindu Law proper. Such suits have been allowed on the analogy of similar suits in England which were dealt with originally in ecclesiastical jurisdiction. There is no stringent rule that in every case, unless actual cruelty is established, the husband is entitled to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Whether he is so entitled or not must be decided after a consideration of all the circumstances of the case. What is sought in such a suit is an equitable relief and equitable considerations cannot be ignored when they are in favour of the Hindu wife. The equitable relief sought in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is not to be granted to a person who has himself been guilty of fraud and has acquired his right to apply for it by means of such fraud. Where in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by a husband against his wife it was found that the marriage itself was brought about by a fraudulent misrepresentation by the husband that he was a bachelor,

According to the ancient Hindu Law, a marriage between a Rajput male and a Sudra female is valid but in comparatively recent times such marriages have fallen into disuse as they began to be looked upon with dis favour but there is no prohibition against them. The tendency of the Courts appears to be to recognize such marriages as valid and this tendency is consistent with the ordinary rule that unless clearly proved to the contrary the decision should be in favour of legality of connection between man and woman specially if the intention of the parties was to treat it as a marriage. In the Punjab generally and in the Kangra and the adjoining districts specially the people have retained the old Aryan rules and habits more than elsewhere and it is for this reason that anuloma marriages between the different main castes have been recognized as valid, both by custom and according to the personal law of the parties. The Kanaits must be treated as a class of Rajputs of a lower order and even if they be treated as Sudras, being undoubtedly Hindus, a marriage between a Kanait woman and a Rajput male must be held to be valid, both by custom and under the Hindu Law. Accounts.

———Partition—Accounts—Liability of manager to account subsequent to suit.

Ordinarily in a partition suit brought by an adult member of a joint family, the division in status may be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to have taken place from the date on which the suit is instituted. The assets available for division will be those which the joint family possessed on that date, and the manager will not liable for back accounting. But subsequent to the date of suit, the members are only tenants-in-common and so the managing member is strictly bound to account for all receipts and expenses and can take credit only for such expenses as have been incurred for the benefit or necessity of the estate and the net income after deduction of such expenses will have to be divided equally between him and the plaintiff. ———Partition—Accounts—Manager's liability to account for past dealings.

It is settled law that, in the absence of proof of misappropriation or fraudulent or improper conversion by the manager of a joint family, a coparcener seeking partition is not entitled to call upon the manager to account for his past dealings with the family property. The coparcener is entitled only to an account of the joint family property as it exists on the date he demands partition. On a reference to arbitration for the settlement of disputes and the partition of joint family property, the arbitrator made an unequal partition. He gave the bulk of the property to the son and allowed the father a small monthly allowance, in view of the fact that the father had been for some time squandering the property and incurring debts.

Held, that the arbitrator should have made the award on the basis of the legal rights of the parties and not on moral considerations, that the award was not, however, void from its inception but only voidable, and that not having been attacked on that ground, the award had become final and binding on the parties. ———Partition—Evidence of—Intention of parties—Cesser of commensality.

Partition is a question of intention and all that the law requires is that the intention should be clearly and unequivocally expressed whether it is by explicit declaration or by conduct. Though mere cesser of commensality or separate enjoyment of distinct portions of the properties or separate definement of shares in revenue or survey paper or mere proof of separate transactions entered into by the coparceners with strangers will not be conclusive to prove separation in estate, it does not, however, follow that even though all these elements may be present in a case and no matter what special significance any of these various elements may have having regard to the facts of a particular case, they can under no circumstances be sufficient to prove separation. Cesser of commensality, though always it may not be conclusive may yet be a decisive factor in determining the intention of the parties, in the circumstances of a particular case. 54 I.A. 413; 14 M.I.A. 412 and 31 C. 262, Ref. Female sharer.

———Partition—Female sharer—Allotment of share to wife, mother or grandmother—Wife, mother or grandmother, when become owner thereof.

Under the Mitakshara Law, the mother or the grandmother is entitled to a share when sons or grandsons divide the family estate between themselves, but she cannot be recognized as the owner of such share until the division is actually made as she has no pre-existing right in the estate except a right of maintenance. She cannot claim a share upon a mere severance of the joint status of the family. There is no difference in this respect between the rights of a wife and those of a mother or grandmother. Where, therefore, a preliminary decree in a partition suit is not carried out and no actual division of the joint family property is made, the wife does not become the owner of the share mentioned therein, (Sir Lancelot Sanderson) PRATAP MULL v. DHANABATI BIBI. 63 I.A. 33=63 Cal. 691=1936 A.L.J. 89=43 L.W. 177=1936 M.W.N. 5=17 Pat. Partial partition.

As between members of a joint family, no suit for partial partition lies. But a member or members of a joint family may sue an alienee from a member of the joint family for his or their share of the property alienated without suing for a general partition. In so doing, they affirm the sale by the other member or members but the real basis of the rule is that as the rule against partial partition is a rule, for the protection of the joint family against being harassed by multiplicity of suits at the instance of alienees from recalcitrant members, they can waive the benefit of it and bring a suit to separate themselves from the undesirable stranger. Similarly the rule against partial partition does not apply to a suit by an alienee from one member against another alienee from another member of the joint family, irrespective of the consideration as to who is the prior alienee in point of time. The right of the one alienee to sue the other follows as a corollary of the right of one member to sue the alienee for partial partition. So one alienee is entitled to bring a suit against the other for partition of those items in respect of which the contending parties to the suit are tenants in-common. Power of father.

———Partition—Power of father—Deed of transfer by father in favour of third person—If can effect.

No doubt the father in a Hindu family has power to effect a partition between himself and his sons and an unequivocal expression of an intention to separate amounts to a partition. At the same time a partition cannot be effected by the father executing a deed of transfer in favour of a third person and an expression of intention to separate or even an actual attempt to effect a partition in such a deed, will not amount to partition. A partition must be effected before the transfer and cannot be effected by the transfer itself. (*Staples, A. J. ———Partition—Power of father—Family consisting of father and lunatic son—Partition effected by father—Validity as against after-born son of lunatic son—If effects severance in status—Declaration of intention to coparceners—Necessity.

When a Hindu father brings about a division between himself and his sons, such an act is done in the exercise of a special power, which he has under the texts of Hindu Law, and is independent of the doctrine of severance of status among coparceners generally by a declaration of intention to become divided. The father's power comprises two things: (1) division between himself and his sons; (2) divisions between the sons inter se. Whether or not in the latter case there may be a mere division of status at the father's choice, the possibility of a severance of status in the former case may be recognized, for the father need not take a share for himself. Although there can be no partition as against future coparceners except through living coparceners, it cannot be said that a disqualified son such as a lunatic is not in any sense a coparcener. There is a dormant coparcenership in him and there is no reason why the possibility of such a severance of status, as would put an end to the right of succession by survivorship, should be denied. Where, therefore, after a partition effected by a father between himself and his lunatic son, the latter's wife, being enceinte at the time of the father's death, gives birth to a son, the partition, though it cannot be upheld as a partition of specific shares, certainly effects a severance in status between the father and the lunatic son. The latter and his son are therefore entitled to a division of properties into equal shares and to delivery of one share to themselves. ———Partition—Power of father—Father effecting partition—Consent of sons immaterial—Equal shares to be allotted.

According to Hindu Law it is competent to a father to make a partition of the joint property during his lifetime, even without the consent of his sons and the partition so made binds the sons. ———Partition—Proof—Separate enjoyment for long period—Inference.

The severance of joint status is a matter of individual volition. It may be effected by agreement Where possession of different portions of joint family property by different coparceners can only be explained by assuming that there has been either a formal partition by metes and bounds or tacit agreement to separate, the Court is justified in assuming that partition has been effected in one way or the other, although owing to lapse of time it is impossible to prove by definite evidence how and when it had happened. ———Partition—Re-union—Validity—Conditions.

Para. 2 of S. 9, Ch. II, Mitakshara, makes clear that the parties to a re-union must have been parties to the original partition. When para. 3 states: "that cannot take place with any person indifferently, but only with a father, a brother or a paternal uncle," it is intended to place a further restriction within a still narrower limit than that prescribed by para. 2. The express mention of the father, brother and paternal uncle is restrictive and not merely illustrative. Therefore, a re-union, although established in fact, is inoperative in law, unless the parties to it are within the class of relationship to which re-union is limited under the Mitakshara and they are also parties to the original partition. When a member of a joint family separates, the remaining coparceners without any special agreement among themselves may continue to be coparceners and enjoy as members of a joint family the property remaining after such partition of the family property. ———Partition—Separation of one member—Effect on status of others.

The intention to separate communicated by one co-sharer to other co sharers does not raise a presumption that the other co-sharers became separate inter se. Ample time for consideration must be allowed; if such time has elapsed and shares have been defined with a view to allotment to the several coparceners, than in the absence of any evidence of agreement, it may perhaps be inferred that there was separation. But the intention to separate evidenced by the plaint in a suit by one member does not render it necessary for the other members of the joint family to prove that at the time of the institution of the suit, they agreed to remain re-united. They must ordinarily be considered to be taking time for consideration while the suit was in progress, and the decree for partition proves the nature of their eventual decision. It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the other coparceners had come to a definite agreement soon after they learnt of the institution of the suit either show that the others also were decided at the time of the institution of the suit or render it necessary for them to show that at the time of the institution of the suit, they agreed to remain united. 5 Lah. 92 (P.C.); 30 C. 725 (P.C.); 4 Lah. 350 (P.C.) and 48 M. 254 (P.C.), Ref. The separation of one brother raises no presumption either that there was a separation amongst the other brothers or that the latter remained joint. ———Partition—Separation of one member—Status of remaining members—Presumption,

The general principle is that every family governed by Mitakshara school of law is presumed to be joint unless the contrary is proved but if one member of the family separates from others, this presumption is destroyed and there is no presumption that the separation was partial and was confined only to the member separating himself and that the remaining members of the family remained united. It is, however, open to the remaining members to continue to remain united or re-united but this can be only by virtue of an express or implied agreement between them and such an agreement, if pleaded, must be proved like any other fact. In other words, where proof of an express agreement to remain joint or to re-unite is wanting, such an agreement may be implied from the conduct of the non separating coparceners, if the conduct points to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the separation of the outgoing coparcener, they intend to remain joint. But in the absence of proof of an express or implied agreement to that effect, the presumption is that each coparcener is separated from the other. There is, however, no presumption that there was a separation between one coparcener and his descendants. ———Partition—Severance of status—Institution of suit for partition—Effect of.

Partition, according to the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law is a severance of the joint status and a matter of individual volition. A definite and unequivocal indication of his intention by a member of a joint family to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty is all that is necessary. It is immaterial whether the other members consent. The intention to separate may indicate either by explicit declaration or by conduct; the institution of a suit for partition is a sufficient indication. Although a decree in the suit is necessary for working out the shares, the status becomes separate on the assertion of the right to separate, whether the suit proceeds to judgment or not. The statement by a member of a joint Hindu family in a deed of transfer executed by him to a stranger specifying his share in the family property as half and that he is separate from the other coparceners will not itself constitute separation and make the deed valid, which is otherwise invalid. There may be cases in which from statements of separation in the deed of transfer itself, an inference of fact may be drawn that there was a partition. But a mere statement in the deed that the transferor has got a specific share will not constitute separation as a matter of law. Subsequently born son.

———Partition—Subsequently born son—Right to question partition.

It is an ordinary incident of Hindu Law that when partition is effected between two brothers and these brothers have minor sons, each brother represents his branch consisting of himself and his sons. If it were not so, no partition would be effected so long as there are minors living in the family. So a partition effected in 1890 between two brothers cannot be questioned by a son born in 1905. No fresh cause of action is created by his birth as his father represented the line before his birth. (Sen and Bajpai, JJ.) JAMNA PRASAD v. MT. ———Religious endowment—Dedication—Burden of proof—Tests.

In the absence of any evidence to prove that a certain institution, for which the character of a Math is claimed is actually engaged in religious or charitable work, the institution can neither be regarded as a religious or charitable institution, nor its property as a religious or charitable endowment. The burden must be laid on the Mahant of proving that the property in his possession has been dedicated to the institution before it can be treated as res extra commercium. The dedication may be established either by production of a written instrument of endowment or by circumstantial evidence such as the mode of appropriation of the income, the entries in the revenue records pertaining to the lands and the title under which the accounts are kept. The test which should apply to such cases are these: Was the institution subservient to the Mahant or was the Mahant subservient to the Math? Was the Mahant under a legal obligation to apply the income of the property in his possession solely to the purposes of the institution or was it discretionary with him to do so? Whether the plaintiff was only a manager of the institution and administering its property as its agent or he was himself the owner, who, to justify his profession as an ascetic devoted at his discretion a fraction of the income to the purposes of the Math, the decision would depend on the nature of the answers which, in view of the evidence it is incumbent on the plaintiff to lead, could be given to the aforesaid questions. The dedication of property to a deity is not a sacrament, but a secular act like a gift of property by one person to another. In the case of religious and charitable gifts, not the acceptance but only the act of donation that is essential, i.e., the essential element is the renunciation of the donor of his propery and not the acceptance of it. All that is involved in dedication is the divesting of ownership. That can be done by a clear expression of intention to dedicate the property and to renounce ownership coupled with acts showing appropriation of the income of the property to the purposes of the endowment. The settlor had executed a deed of wakf by which he dedicated his entire properties for the service and worship of five deities. He appointed five persons named therein as managers and mutawallis with the reservation that he in his lifetime and his wife after him should be the first manager. Then the deed recited the objects upon which the income was to be expended which inter alia included the maintenance of worship, festivities and other religious and charitable purposes. Then followed a clause by which he was to get his personal expenses, the expenses of his family and the marriage expenses of his daughter out of the estate, according to their position in life. He also reserved the right of appointing managers during his lifetime. Subsequent to the execution of the deed, though the sangalp and samarpan ceremonies were formally performed, the settlor, instead of applying for mutation of names in favour of the deities, applied for registration of his own name. The net income of the property was Rs. 5,300 while the objects of the trust involved an expenditure of only Rs. 1,700. There was no change in the manner of expenditure and the settlor sometime later executed a second deed making further provision for his possible descendants.

Held, under the circumstances, the deed only created a charge on the property for the service and worship of the deities and not an out and out dedication. In determining whether the will of a Hindu gives the testator's estate to an idol subject to a charge in favour of heirs or makes the gift to the idol a charge upon the estate, there is no fixed rule depending upon the use of particular terms in the will; the question depends upon the construction of the will as a whole. A will provided that the testator's sister shall enjoy the immovable property and from its income shall expend annually certain quantities of paddy and of cash towards the upkeep of the specified ceremonies and charities and shall give the testator's wife a certain quantity of paddy for maintenance and contained the following clause: 'In this manner my sister and her male heirs and their descendants from generation to generation shall defray the aforesaid expenses and take the balance of the income for themselves'.

———Religious endowment—Dedication—Real or illusory—Test of.

The tests of a bona fide or a nominal endowment are how did the founder treat this property, or how have his descendants treated it as the income of the endowed lands been continuously applied to the object of dedication? It is incorrect to presume that because a nominal endowment has once been made it is to be regarded an an endowment for ever In order to establish the case of a real, bona fide endowment, it must be established that an absolute grant was in the first place made with the intention that the profits should be applied for the services of the idol, that the profits have since been so applied and that the members of the family of the founder have not treated the property as one, the profits of which were mainly intended to be applied for their benefit. The grantor should have completely divested himself of every portion of the endowed property and for this purpose the evidence of the actions of the party after the deed of dedication can legitimately be gone into as determining the question whether there has been a real dedication. 3 W.R. 142; 18 W.R. 399; 15 C. The ancestor of the plaintiffs and defendants founded an endowment for the worship of the family idols sometime prior to 1846, and by an ekrarnama of that year, 1846, certain properties were charged with the worship of the idols. The arrangement was that the two branches of the family, through whom the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively claimed should get their shares in proportion of 10 As. and 6 As. and that they must pay the expenses of the debsheba and religious ceremonies, etc. Shortly after this, there was a division of the rights of shebaitship or right of worship and palas or turns of worship were established, one branch agreeing to worship the idol during 19 days of the month and the other for 11 days on the month. This arrangement went on for about 70 years, when the head of one of the branches executed a will, by which he directed, inter alia, that in a certain event his entire properties should be devoted to the debsheba of the idols, if there was any surplus after meeting the revenue charges, and if there was a further surplus, the money should be devoted for the purpose or certain charitable institutions and a hospital.

Held, (1) that there was no absolute dedication of the properties to the idols, but that the intention of the testator was that the money should be devoted for carrying on his turn of worship only, without any provision for the turn of worship of the other branch of the family, and to hold otherwise would be to disregard the state of things existing at the time the testator made the will; (2) that the succession to the properties and to the shebait ship of the testator must follow the line of succession of the heirs of the testator; and the other branch had no right or claim to succeed as against the heirs of the testator. So long as there is a clear and unequivocal mainfestation of intention to create a trust and there is a formal divesting of the ownership in the property on the part of the donor and vesting of the same in another or even in the donor himself as a trustee, that is to say, so long as there is a clear change in the tenure of the property with the intention on the part of the donor to devote it to religious or public purposes, dedication thereof must be deemed to be complete. HINDU LAW—Religious endowment.

———Religious endowment—Dedication—What constitutes—Subsequent conduct of parties.

The mere execution of a deed, although it may purport on the face of it to dedicate property to an idol, is not enough to constitute a valid endowment. It is necessary to the validity of a deed of endowment that the executant should divest himself of the property dedicated. Whether he has done so or not is to be determined by the subsequent acts and conduct of the party or parties For instance, if the profits of a certain dedicated property are appropriated by the executant to his own use and not spent for the worship of the idol and his subsequent dealings with the property show that he did not intend to create an endowment, the dedication will be held to be inoperative and the property cannot be treated as debutter, i.e., as belonging to the idol. Where, however, the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties show that as a matter of fact, the profits of the property have been utilised in the performance of the debsheba in accordance with the rules laid down in the deed of dedication, a contrary conclusion may be drawn. The mere fact that the members of the settlor's family are nominated shebaits and that they are to be remunerated out of the income of the property is no ground for holding that the dedication is not real, provided that the remuneration is reasonable having regard to the income of the property. The question whether the dedication is a complete or partial one, may be decided on the construction of the document. The question in such a case is, whether any beneficial interest is reserved to any person and if so, what is the nature and extent of the beneficial interest so reserved? Is it a mere charge or trust in favour of the idol or whether the property alleged to have been dedicated is property which is descendible to the heirs of the settlor? If it is the latter, it is only a partial dedication. (*C. C. ———Religious endowment—Devolution of office—Shebaitship—Office limited to "pisran"—Gift to deity.

A document executed by the founder of a religious endowment ran as follows: "First of all the Government revenue having been paid through me and after me through my sons, heirs, representatives, the entire produce thereof shall be spent on daily puja .. .. . and the other necessary items and feeding sadhus, saints and Brahmins by me as the sevak and after my death by my sons, heirs, representatives. My heirs and representatives shall have on no account any right to sell the said mauza dedicated to the said temple. I and after me my sons, heirs and representatives shall take care of all the things mentioned above, sadar and mofusil, appertaining to the said mauza and the temple." The document was written in Urdu and the words which repeatedly occurred in it were "pisran, warisan kayam mokamian," meaning sons, heirs and representatives, respectively.

Held, that there was no question of an estate of inheritance. There was a gift out and out to the deity and the office of the shebait was to devolve in accordance with the intention of the donor so far as could be gathered from the document. The use of the word "pisran" indicated that the founder preferred male descendants to occupy the office of the shebait; in their absence, the shebait was to be chosen from the heirs, and lastly from among the legal representatives of the donor. The grandson of the donor was therefore entitled to a declaration that he was the sole shebait of the deity as against a female descendant of the donor who claimed to be a co shebait. 4 B.L.R. 103 and A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 309, Ref.; A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 265, Affir. The founder of a Hindu debutter is competent to lay down rules to govern the succession to the office of shebait subject to the restriction that he cannot create any estate unknown and repugnant to Hindu Law. The person succeeding to the shebaiti under such rules is a grantee or donee of property and his right to succeed to the office is subject to the rule that a gift cannot be made by a Hindu to a person not in existence at the time of the gift. (2) The rules for succession to the office of shebait are rendered invalid, if they provide for the office to be held by some among the heirs of the founder to the exclusion of others, in a succession differing from the line of Hindu inheritence. (3) The rule laid down in Tagore case prohibiting a Hindu from creating a line of succession unknown to Hindu Law applies as well to the appointment of a shebait of a family thakur. The office of shebait is a kind of property and not merely an office, and the rules laid down in the case of Tagore v. Tagore, 9 B. L. R. 377 apply to it. Thus though the settlors may provide for succession to the office, they must not in so doing attempt to create an estate unknown to Hindu Law, and a provision that the succession is to be held by certain heirs of the founder to the exclusion of others in a line contrary to the Hindu law of inheritanse is invalid. ———Religious endowment — Devolution of office— Shebaitship — Succession to—Perpetual succession of eldest male lineal descendant of last shebait—Succession opposed to Hindu Law—Invalidity of clause—Reversion of succession to heirs of testator.

A testator created a religious endowment by his will and provided as follows for the devolution of the shebaitship. "I appoint my sons K and R to be shebaits of the Thakurs and I direct that upon the death, retirement or refusal to act of any of them or any of the future shebaits, the then next eldest male lineal descendant of K or R shall act as shebait it being my intention that the eldest for the time being in the male line of my said sons K and R shall always remain as joint shebaits and in the event of the death or refusal to act of any shebait the then next male member of the branch to which the shebait dying or refusing belonged shall act as shebait in his place and stead." Both K and R died shortly after the testator and on a dispute arising about the right to succeed to the shebait ship.

Held, that on a proper construction of the will there was no absolute gift to the heirs of R and K or to their next eldest lineal male descendant. On the contrary, a perpetual succession was sought to be established whereby on the death, retirement or refusal to act of the eldest male lineal descendant for the time being either of the two original shebaits, the next eldest male lineal descendant was to succeed to the shebaitship. Cl. 11 could not be considered as an independent gift to the persons who happened to answer the description of the eldest male lineal descendant of the original shebaits at the time of their death. The clause attempted to lay down a line of succession not permissible under the Hindu Law and was therefore invalid. Both the shebaits appointed by the will being dead, the shebaitship devolved upon the heirs of the testator and not upon the sons of the deceased shebaits. In the absence of a provision in the deed creating an endowment as to the succession to the shebaitship, the shebaitship follows the line of heirs of the founder. But the same rule does not always apply as an absolute rule where there is an accretion to debutter properties either by some other member of the family or by a stranger The circumstances of each case must be considereded. When there has been a division of the turn of worship, it would be just that the shebaitship should follow the line of heirs of the person making the subsequent dedication. (*D. N. The doctrine that an idol is a perpetual minor is an extravagant doctrine contrary to the decision of the Privy Council in such cases as 37 Cal. 885. Strong facts may be necessary in order to establish adverse possession in any case in which there is a reasonable possibility that the possession is being held under the idol's title ; but where a non-shebait is holding property in open derogation of the trust, a plea of adverse possession can be sustained. The power of the shebait of an idol's estate to incur debts is analogous to that of the manager of an infant heir. The power can only be exercised in case of need or for the benefit of the estate. The test is: Is the debt in the particular instance one that a prudent owner would incur in order to benefit the estate? If the answer is in the affirmative, a bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the manager. The lender of course cannot support a charge grounded on a necessity, which his own wrong has helped to cause Unless therefore he is shown to have acted mala fide, the lender will not be affected, though it be proved that with better management the necessity in question would not have arisen. 2 I.A. 145 (P.C.) and 6 M.I.A. 393 (P.C.), Rel. on. There is no presumption that any particular temple is public or private; whether it is public or private depends on facts proved in each case. The mere fact that offerings were received in a case where there was a deed creating a private endowment would not be sufficient to alter the private nature of the endowment. But where a temple is held by professed ascetics in succession from gurus to chelas the zemindari which belongs to the temple has been purchased by the gurus in the name of the deity, subscriptions are received from the public to maintain the temple, the public visiting the temple can perform darshan and it is open to any one visiting the temple to make an offering, the temple is a public endowment. ———Religious endowment — Temple— Public or private—Presumption in Malabar as regards temples —Nature of temple to be established on evidence.

In the greater part of the Madras Presidency where private temples are practically unknown, the presumption is that temples and their endowments form public charitable trusts. But no such presumption exists in case of temples situated in Malabar. For the prevailing impression in Malabar is that the Nair temples are private. However the decision whether a temple in Malabar can be regarded as a public temple really depends on the inferences to be derived from the evidence as to the way in which the temple endowments have been dealt with and the evidence as to the public user of the temples. When therefore the karnavan of a once powerful tarwad is found in management of seven temples in the neighbourhood of the tarwad house, the inference would appear to be that the temples were founded and endowed by his predecessors. ———Religious endowment — Temple— Public or private—Test.

One of the tests to determine whether an endowment is a private family endowment or a public endowment is to consider whether the founder or all the members of the family could divert the income of the endowed property to their own private use or to any purpose other than that expressed in the deed of endowment. Under the express terms of the deed, the income could not be diverted in any event and at any time, but was to be used for all time to the purpose of maintaining the services in the temple. The founder had diverted himself completely of his interest in the property and had transferred it to the temple and the images therein. It must be treated to be of a public nature. ———Religious endowment — Temple — Public or private—Test of distinction.

There is no hard and fast rule or conclusive test to determine if a temple is private or public. The main charactertistic of a public temple is that it is intended for the use of the public at large or at any rate, an indeterminate, though restricted class of the Hindu community generally. On the other hand, private temples are intended for the worship of the family or other god by members of the family of the donor exclusively. Though the public can be allowed access even to a private temple in such a way as to exclude any idea of its being a public institution, such access is only by sufferance. But in the case of a public temple the public is entitled to the privilege of worship therein as a matter of right. Where the temple was built in another place removed from the residential houses of the testator who made a complete dedication of a portion of his property in its favour, the public had free access to the temple for purpose of worship and made offerings in kind and money and a shrine had been built within the temple by a stranger to the family, held, that the temple was dedicated to the public.

HINDU LAW—Reversioner.

Where a woman in possession of properties as limited owner and also of other properties as an absolute owner deals with them indifferently, mixes them and inverts them as she likes, a reversioner, claiming the limited estate on the death of the limited estate-holder, need not necessarily trace that estate into any particular form of existing assets and in the absence of clear evidence that such estate had ceased to exist, presumption is that it continues; he will be entitled to a charge on the existing assets for the value of such estate. 10 M L.T. 313 and A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 148, Foll. ———Reversioner—Liability — Funeral and Sradh expenses of widow of last male-holder.

The funeral expenses as well as the expenses of Sradh ceremonies of the mother and the widow of the deceased last male-holder are in the nature of legal charges. They are a legal obligation on the estate which the reversioners get. If a person is obliged to defray those charges, then the estate of the last male-holder is liable for them. The reversioners who inherit the estate should pay such expenses out of the estate. A person who expended money on funeral expenses of the mother of the last male-holder cannot claim any charge or lien in respect of those expenses and cannot resist the claim of the reversioners for possession. According to the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, if a person is obliged to spend money for the medical treatment and for the funeral obsequies of the mother of the last male-holder of the estate, it is open to him to sue the heirs and obtain a decree. Such expenses are defrayable out of the estate being in the nature of legal charges. But he cannot improve his position by getting possession of the estate unlawfully and then claiming a lien over it and so resist the claim of the reversioners for possession until the money spent by him is paid. A Hindu woman, born in a rich family, owned considerable properties as her stridhan. She died leaving two daughters, a son and her husband. But the daughters, both during and after their minority, were never in possession, the management continuing with the father and afterwards with the son. Subsequently one of the daughters died

Held, that the accumulations or the properties acquired by the income of the properties did not form part of the main estate, but would be taken by the daughters in equal shares, and when one of the daughters died, her share would not lapse to the other by survivorship, but would be inherited by her heirs. Whatever reason or justification—historical or sacerdotal—might exist for looking with disfavour on a widow's right to dispose of her surplus income or transmit the same to a line of heirs different from her husband's, the same considerations need not be extended to the case of a daughter inheriting her mother's stridhana properties. Bandhus.

———Succession—Bandhus—Atma bandhus—Priority—Father's sister's son and maternal uncle—Preference—Test—Doctrine of spiritual benefit.

Among Atma bandhus governed by the Mitakshara Law, the rule of succession to be observed is that in each clauss propinquity should be the governing factor, and if that fails to guide the Court, and only then, the Court should apply the rule based on spiritual efficacy or the offering of oblations. As between the maternal uncle and father's sister's son, the former is the preferential heir. ———Succession—Bandhus—Bandhus on mother's side—Preference.

Because under Mitakshara, mother is regarded as nearer heir to her son than the father. The preference awarded to the mother cannot be extended to bandhus on her side of the family. 12 M.I.A. 448. The preference of the mother to the father in respect of succession to the property of the son under the Mitakshara does not extend to bandhus on the mother's side. ———Succession— Bandhus— Classes mentioned in Mitakshara, if exhaustive—Meaning of Pitri bandhus and Matru bandhus.

The three classes of bandhus mentioned in the Mitakshara cannot be added to. The last male-owner's father's father's daughter's son's daughter's sons are not his heritable bandhus. A heritable bandhu cannot be lower than the common ancestor's daughter's grandson or the common ancestor's son's great grandson, that is, there should be no great grandmother in the line on either side of the common ancestor.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The words pitri and matri in describing bandhus are used in an adjective sense. They mean the person's bandhus through the father or mother. The words cannot mean that a cognate who is the father's bandhu or the mother's bandhu though not a bandhu of the propositus is an heir. The father's mother's mother's father and the mother's mother's mother's father are not included as heritable bandhus. ———Succession—Bandhus—Father's half sister's son and mother's sister's son—Preference.

Under the Benares School of the Mitakshara the father's half sister's son takes the inheritance in preference to the mother's sister's son. The rule of preference of the whole-blood to the half-blood is not material in deciding the propinquity of rival bandhus, not descended from a common ancestor. ———Succession—Bandhus—Preference—Rules under Mitakshara—Daughter's daughter's son and sister's son—Priority—Spiritual benefit—Applicability.

In cases of bandhu succession under the Mitakshara, among Atma bandhus, one's own descendants should be preferred to the father's descendants, and the father's descendants to those of the grandfather. Consequently, the daughter's daughter's son excludes the sister's son. Though the principle of spiritual benefit may be resorted to even under the Mitakshara, it should not be applied so as to defeat the rule that the nearer line excludes the more remote. HINDU LAW—Succession.

———Succession—Bandhus—Tests of propinquity.

The primary test in questions of inheritance among bandhus is propinquity in blood. As between bandhus who are in an equal degree of propinquity to the propositus, those who are related ex parte paterna are preferred to those related ex parte materna. But a safer test of the measure of propinquity where the degree of blood relationship furnishes no certain guide, is the doctrine of spiritual benefit, the inheritance going to him, whose funeral oblations confer most spiritual benefit on the propositus. 13 M.I.A. 373 and 16 Mad. 23, Ref. Burden of proof.

———Succession—Burden of proof—Claim by nearest collaterals.

In a suit where the plaintiffs claim to succeed to the estate of a deceased Hindu as his nearest collaterals, the mere fact that are the nearest male collaterals of the deceased would not in itself be sufficient to show that they are the next heirs. It is incumbent on them to prove that the deceased has not left any nearer heir, such as a daughter or a daughter's son who would exclude the plaintiffs even if they happen to be the nearest male collaterals. ———Succession—Burden of proof—Proof of relationship.

Where a person claims to succeed another on ground of relationship with the latter, he should establish not only his own relationship with the last male-holder, but also prima facie, that no nearer heirs are alive. Where the Court cannot arrive at that conclusion on the evidence of the plaintiff, either because he is not in a position to speak on the subject, or because his evidence is manifestly untrue, it should be satisfied by other credible evidence that no nearer heir exists, before the defendant is called upon to substantiate his definite case that he is a nearer heir Where both parties have adduced evidence, the question of onus loses all importance and the Court should record a definite finding as to whether the defendant is the nearer heir. The question may assume some importance where the Court has to reject the evidence adduced on either side as absolutely untrustworthy. In such a case the plaintiff's title can prevail only if the Court is an a position to find not only that he is related to the last male holder, as he alleges, but also that no nearer heir is alive. Dayabhaga school.

———Succession — Dayabhaga school — Doctrine of spiritual benefit.

Even among those who are entitled to offer pindas, preference is given to such heirs as are entitled to offer a larger number of pindas or to a greater number of ancestors than others. Even according to the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law under which the right of inheritance is mainly based on the doctrine of spiritual benefit, it cannot be applied consistently in all cases in cases of females succeeding to males, in the case of a chela succeeding to a guru or in the case of samanodakas. The doctrine of spiritual benefit or offering of funeral oblations is not the only test of heirship. Propinquity or proximity of birth is the principle underlying the order of succession but the capacity for conferring spiritual benefit is also taken into consideration along with it according to the Bengal School. The question of the capacity to offer funeral cakes becomes important when it has to be considered in connection with the claims of rival competitors to heirship and in determining the order of succession. In other words it is a key to the order of succession but not to inheritance. It is on the failure of nearest heirs, that the question of spiritual benefit really arises. There is no authority for the proposition that, if an heir does not or refuses to offer pindas to his ancestor, he is not entitled under the Hindu Law to succeed to him. The right to inherit is based not on offering pinda, but on the capacity to offer it. Jati Vaishnavas may not observe caste and Sradh and offer pindas. A person, who is deaf and dumb from his birth and whose disease is incurable, is in law excluded from inheritance. ———Succession — Disqualification — Lunacy — Mitakshara school — Supervening disqualification— Effect of.

Under the Hindu Law governed by Mitakshara a congenital disqualification may prevent property arising by birth, but a disqualification (such as lunacy) that supervenes later will merely cause a suspension of the right of a coparcener thus afflicted by disqualification to a share upon a partition and for the rest leave the coparcenery interest in tact. Therefore his right as a coparcener is not so affected by the supervening disqualification as to prevent him from taking the whole estate by survivorship after the death of his brother. The coparcenary right of R, to the estate that came into existence at birth, subsisted all through, although one component part of it—the right to obtain a share on partition—would have been incapable of enforcement, if after his madness, the other coparcener J had attempted partition. From the time of her madness onwards, whenever it may have supervened, R still continued to be a coparcener, though without the right to take a share upon partition during the continuance of his disability. Upon the death of the other coparcener J, R would be the only member of the coparcenary left and there being then no question of partition, he would take the whole estate. 10 All. 272; 6 Bom. 616 and 33 Bom. 482, Dist.; 43 M. 464, Rel. on.

In order to qualify as a male agnate, or gotraja-sapinda of the propositus a person must satisfy two conditions, namely, (a) that he is of the same gotra, or, as it may be expressed, of a common partiarchal stock, and (b) that he is a sapinda of the deceased, connected by blood through a common ancestor, the connexion being traced through males. Where a person proves that he is a sapinda, he cannot have the benefit of the further presumption that he is also a gotraja if the opposite party challenges its correctness. The word "Gotraja" which literally means born in the same gotra is a term indicative of relationship and gotraja-sapindas are persons who are descended from one paternal stock. If a person's title to inherit as a gotraja-sapinda is challenged on the ground of difference between his and the gotra of the propositus, not only should he prove the identity of the gotra or community of the family, but also that the continuity of the line of descent from the common ancestor downwards is not broken by an adoption of any person in his line into another gotra or family; in other words, he should prove a subsisting title. ———Widow—Accretions—Accretion to husband's estate—Proof of intention.

Where a widow acquires certain property by pre-emption from the savings of her husband's estate and treats the property so acquired as one with the property received from her husband, it is to be presumed that she intended the property so acquired to be treated as an accretion to her husband's estate. If the widow seven years after the acquisition gifts the property so acquired along with the property of the husband to one who is not the heir of the husband, it does not disprove the widow's intention to make an accretion to the estate of the husband. Therefore a person suing as a reversionary heir for a declaration that a deed of gift made by a widow is void as against him is entitled to a decree to the extent of the whole property gifted. The dispositions made by a Hindu widow for pious or charitable purposes must be clearly distinguished from her alienations for purely worldly purposes. While she has indisputable power in respect of the former, she has none in respect of the latter, unless legal necessity exists. If the disposition is proved to have been made for a pious or charitable purpose, it is incumbent on the party impeaching it to prove its impropriety, but if the alienation is for a worldly purpose, the onus is on the person seeking to affirm it of proving the justifying necessity. The pious or charitable gifts are valid, and secular alienations are invalid, unless respectively the contrary is proved. The widow does not, however, enjoy an unlimited power of disposition even for pious and charitable purposes. ———Widow—Alienation—Consent of reversioner—Effect of.

It is not correct to say that an alienation by a Hindu widow can be binding on the reversioners only if the act amounts to a surrender of her estate, or if there is legal necessity or if the transferee makes bona fide enquiries and is satisfied as to the existence of the necessity, even if in fact there is no necessity. Nor can it be said that the only effect of consent of a presumptive reversioner is to raise a presumption of necessity. If the actual reversioner on the death of the widow is not the one who gave his consent, the alienation will bind him only in the three cases mentioned above. But if he was the consenting reversioner, such consent has to be regarded as an effective election by him and the alienation is binding on him. It cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that a Hindu widow is not entitled to alienate property belonging to her husband for the purpose of paying interest on debts due by him. The question is essentially one of fact depending on the circumstances of the particular case. Ordinarily the widow is expected to pay such interest from out of the income and where she has not so acted, her conduct and that of the creditor may require scrutiny. Where however such conduct is shown to be bona fide, a mortgage effected by the widow for discharging the interest payable on the husband's estate should be upheld. 1913 M W.N. 275 and 1914 M. ———Widow—Alienation—Discharge of husband's debt—Duty to pay off debts from the income—Mortgage of husband's estate.

A widow is not bound to discharge her husband's debts out of the income of his estate ; but she is bound to keep down the interest on her husband's debts and is only entitled to enjoy the net income from her husband's property. But an exception is recognized in favour of the alienee ; if there was actual pressure at the time of the alienation and the widow had then no funds available for the discharge of the debt, or the alienee, after reasonable enquiry, bona fide believed that the alienation was necessary, he will be protected. So a mortgage by a Hindu widow is justified if she was pressed to discharge the debt and it is apparent, that if she did not, the property was liable to be brought to sale in execution of the decree. HINDU LAW—Widow.

An alienation by a Hindu widow otherwise than for legal necessity is permitted where the consent of the whole body of reversioners who would be interested in disputing the transaction has been obtained for the reason that the consent of such persons affords presumptive proof of necessity. This rule is limited to transfers for consideration and cannot appropriately be extended to voluntary transfers by way of gift, where there is no room for the theory of legal necessity. So where the widow makes a gift of the property in favour of a stranger (son-in-law) with the consent of the nearest reversioner (her daughter) the alienation may be binding on the consenting reversioner either on the ground of estoppel or election but not on the ultimate reversioner. In a litigation between a Hindu widow and her husband's brother's heirs, a compromise was entered into which, inter alia, recited that the widow in consideration of the services rendered to her by R. N. in the litigation and arrears of salary due to him, sold him a village. A sale-deed was executed by her and the heirs of her husband's brothers the same day. Her three daughters executed an ekrarnama agreeing to the terms of the compromise. The widow having died, two of the daughters impeached the sale to R. N. and sued for possession of the property on the ground of absence of legal necessity. It was found as a fact that nothing was due to R. N. by the widow and that the so-called sale was only a gift.

Held, that the alienation, by way of gift, was invalid and inoperative against the daughters; that the consent of the daughters only raised the presumption, that the alienation was one which a widow with a life-estate could validly make; that on the finding that the alienation was a gift, rebutted the presumption as there could be no necessity for a gift.

Held further, that there was no question of estoppel, as it could not be said that the daughters by any act of theirs led R. N. to think that something was true and to act on that belief, himself having known what the true facts were.

Held also, that there was neither ratification nor acquiescence. (Agarwala and Saunders, JJ.) RAJIB NAIN LAL v. MT. BINDESHWARI DAI. 15 Pat.L.T. 596.

It is competent to a widow of the Mitakshara school to make a valid gift of the immovable property of her husband to her daughter on the occasion of the daughter's marriage, and such a gift is binding on the reversioners. The limitation on the validity of the gift, is that it must be of a reasonable portion of the property. The gift may be made to the girl or to her husband. The question what is reasonable on these occasions, is a question of fact, which has to be decided with due advertence to all the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily, it must approximate to not more than a fourth of the father's estate, but it is the ordinary and not the invariable rule, since there may be cases justifying a much larger expenditure. In a suit by the reversioners to set aside a mortgage executed by a Hindu widow, the mortgagee having already obtained a decree on foot of the mortgage against the widow in a competent Court, the burden of proving legal necessity for the alienation is on the alienee. It is not for the reversioners to prove that the decree was not fairly and properly entertained. ———Widow—Alienation—Necessity—Proof — Mortgage—Recitals in deed—Value

Recitals in a deed of sale or mortgage with regard to the existence of legal necessity for any alienation by a Hindu widow are not in themselves evidence of such necessity without substantiation by evidence aliunde. But though the onus lies upon the legal representatives of the transferee to prove the necessity for the alienation when it is challenged after a considerable time full and detailed evidence cannot be expected and in such circumstances, presumptions are permissible to fill in details which have been obliterated by time. Further it is not absolutely necessary for a transferee to establish the actual existence of family necessity or to show that the money advanced by him was utilised for such purposes. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed and that he should have acted honestly and made proper inquiry to satisfy himself of its existence The recital in the document is clear evidence of such representation and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an inquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when actual proof of inquiry has become impossible, the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient to support the deed. The estate of a Hindu widow is not a life estate. It is not an estate terminable on the death of the widow. If she makes a gift or alienation otherwise than for necessity, neither the gift nor the alienation is void. The transaction may be useless against the reversioner but as against all persons other than the reversioners, the gift or alienation is perfectly valid and the donee or alienee can maintain an action against the person resisting him provided he is not a reversioner and provided there is no question of limitation. It is true that the reversioner may elect to treat it as valid or set aside the transaction but it is not open to a third person to raise a plea that such a gift is void merely because it may have been but not so treated by the reversioner. Even where the then presumptive reversioner is a party to the compromise, it is, however, an element to be taken into consideration in deciding how far it was bona fide, that it was a "family settlement which was prudent and reasonable under the circumstances." The binding character of a compromise is also based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties and that the agreement acknowledges and defines what that title is. But such considerations can hardly apply to an agreement between the widow and the presumptive reversioner by which they purported to divide the estate and create absolute rights for themselves because so long as the widow is alive, the reversioner has nothing to assign or relinquish or bargain with. 45 C. 590 (P.C.); 45 B. 1167; 22 C. 354; 3 Pat. ———Widow—Compromise — Validity—Reversioner when bound - Arrangement conferring absolute estate on widow—Effect.

A compromise entered into between the widows of two Hindu coparceners, under which each of them was given the powers of a full owner over her share of the properties dealt with, goes beyond the capacity of the widows, as under the Hindu Law, they are only limited owners. Such a compromise does not in any way enlarge the estate or benefit it; its only effect is to increase the powers of the widows themselves adversely to the reversioners. Consequently, it is not valid and binding on the reversioners. A compromise to be valid and binding on the reversioners must be a settlement of a bona fide dispute, or must be entered into for the benefit of the estate in a matter where the widows represent the estate. They may thus convert the joint estate into estates held in severalty. Either of them may relinquish her right of survivorship in that portion of the estate which is held by the other. In that case, if one of them dies, her estate will not revert to the other, but will go to her own heirs as if it were her stridhan; and if she alienates any portion of it, the alienee will continue in possession till the death of the last survivor. It continues to be the husband's estate while it is in possession of the widow who represents it. Therefore any rents which have accrued due since the death of the husband by the tenants holding immoveable property once belonging to him must be considered to be part of his estate and as such liable to be attached in execution of a decree obtained against her husband since deceased. ———Widow—Nature of estate—Properties given to widows under family settlement—No presumption of limited estate.

The ordinary presumption under Hindu Law that a female donee or legatee takes only a limited estate is not applicable where she is given properties under a compromise or a family settlement. The nature of her estate must be determined from the terms of the deed, the circumstances under which the compromise is arrived at and the subsequent conduct of the parties; but the presumption of limited estate does not apply where females have obtained estates under a family settlement or after an adjudication by Court of disputed claims as between them and a male member of the family in which each of them claimed the entire estate. There is nothing to prevent a female from acquiring an absolute estate under a compromise or a family settlement. In the case of a family settlement, it cannot be said that it is a case of a grant by a Hindu male to a Hindu female. Similarly in the case of a compromise, it cannot be said that one party alone makes a grant in favour of the other. In such a case both parties make grants in favour of each other. In dealing with the terms of a compromise, there can be no presumption that a limited estate was granted to the widows. ———Widow—Nature of estate—Test of—Property claimed through husband and through others—Distinction between.

Where a Hindu widow takes the property to which she is not entitled to succeed under Hindu law, the question, whether she acquires a limited estate or an absolute estate depends on the question of fact whether she claimed to take the property through her husband or not. If she has taken as a widow, through her husband, she acquires by prescription only a limited estate of a Hindu widow and does not obtain an absolute estate. It is a question of fact in each case, whether the widow claimed to take through her husband and so limited her claim to a claim for a widow's estate, in which case she would prescribe for the benefit of her husband's estate or whether there is no evidence that she so limited her claim, in which case she will take an absolute estate. It is no doubt true that on the death of her husband, the widow has a right to reside in the family dwelling-house which cannot be sold by her sons without necessity so long as the family remains joint. But where a partition has been effected and on partition certain properties are actually allotted to the widow in full satisfaction of her rights in the joint family estate, she ceases to have any rights of residence in the family dwelling-house or to realise maintenance out of the other properties which remain with the sons. These rights cannot possibly be revived by her subsequently surrendering voluntarily the properties allotted to her to the sons for immediate partition among them and coming to an arrangement with some of them for giving her a cash allowance. to civil death and complete extinguishment of the title of the widow in her husband's estate is that all prior alienations in excess of her powers are liable to be challenged immediately on her civil death just as they could be impeached after she had died. From the date of the surrender, the reversioner gets the property freed from any alienation in excess of the powers of the Hindu widow as if she had died. Those who deal with limited owner take a certain amount of risk. The object of Hindu Law is to prevent improper alienations by the widow or other limited owner. The alienee who deals with a limited owner without any inquiry as to necessity takes a risk in case of surrender by the widow which has the same effect as her death. (*D. N. ———Widow—Surrender—Doctrine applies to surrender to daughter.

The basis of the doctrine of surrender is the effacement of the widow's interest, and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. There is therefore no difference between surrender to a daughter and surrender to the nearest male reversioner. Where, therefore, a widow made a surrender of her estate in 1884 in favour of her daughter who died in 1894, the right of the male reversioners to sue arises on the daughter's death and is barred under Art. 141 of the Limitation Act if brought more than twelve years thereafter, though in time if the computation is made from the subsequent death of widow. 46 All. 59, Appr. ———Widow—Surrender—Nature and effect of—Retention of her rights by the widow—Validity of transaction as surrender.

Where, however, there was no complete relinquishment of the widow's estate, her connection with the estate inherited by her from her husband was fully retained by her, leaving only the management of the estate in the hands of the then reversioner and in fact the solenamah in question contained a clause for resumption by the widow of the management in certain circumstances, the transaction cannot be said to amount to a surrender. Where a Hindu widow transfers for consideration by way of sale, the entire property of the husband to the next reversionary heir or to one of the reversionary heirs, the other reversionary heir not objecting and a major portion of the consideration passes to the widow, the transaction cannot be supported as having the same effect as a surrender. The idea of surrender by a widow in favour of the next reversioner is based on religious considerations. In order that the reversionary heir may acquire good title by surrender, there must be self-effacement of the widow; in other words, there must be something in the nature of civil death of widow, the extinction of her right in her deceased husband's estate, a circumstance which would happen if she were dead. It is in this view that the theory of surrender is supported under the Hindu Law. ———Widow—Surrender — Validity — Conditions—Motives irrelevant.

The motives operating on the mind of a Hindu widow when she surrenders her estate are not relevant in deciding the question whether the surrender is valid. The only two conditions for a valid surrender are: first, a surrender, must be of the surrenderer's whole interest in the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of alienation and, secondly, it must be no device to divide the property between the lady and the reversioner, it being equally fatal to the transaction whether the benefit is directly taken by the lady or by her nominees, subject of course to the proviso that the giving of a small portion to the surrendering widow for her maintenance is unobjectionable. But there is no warrant for importing a third and further condition, namely, that the motives operating on the mind of the widow must be of a religious or spiritual character. ———Will—Absolute estate—Subsequent restriction of alienation—Validity of.

Where in a deed of gift or will an absolute estate of inheritance is created in favour of a person, any subsequent clause which purports to restrict that interest is invalid, and the donee or legatee takes an absolute estate as if the deed contained no such restrictive condition. The rule is the same even if the restriction is for limited period only. A Hindu testator declared in a will that his three sons were his heirs and were absolute owners, in equal shares, of his movable and immovable properties. But in a subsequent clause of the will, he tried to restrict their power of alienation and partition in respect of immovable properties until the youngest of them had attained majority.

Held, that this restriction is clearly repugnant to the absolute estate created in the earlier part of the will and is therefore invalid. (Tek Chand and Monroe, JJ.) UMRAO SINGH v. BALDEV SINGH. 14 Lah 353=I.R. 1933 Lah 371=143 I.C. 615=34 P.L.R. 665=A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 201.

A direction on a will excluding an adopted son from inheriting is void as it is contrary to the principles of Hindu Law. A will by a maternal grandfather excluding a son adopted by his daughter from succession would be contrary to the principles of Hindu Law and is therefore void. The position after the death of the daughter will be the same as if there had been an intestacy and the property will devolve according to the ordinary rules of inheritance. The adopted son will therefore succeed. (Niyogi and Staples, A.J.Cs.) BHIMRAO v. PUNJAB RAO. 158 I.C. 1042=8 R.N. 105=18 N.L.J. 1.

In a suit by the nephew,

Held, (1) that even if it were construed as conferring an absolute estate in favour of the several legatees subject to defeasance on the happening of a subsequent event, the event should happen if at all immediately on the close of a life in being and the gift over must be in favour of some person in existence at the date of the gift or at the death of the testator, as the case may be, otherwise the gift over is void and the first donee takes an absolute estate Further the defeasance being an indefinite failure of a male issue in the line, the defeasance clause was void as it was not a valid executory gift. 9 M.I.A. 123 and 58 I.A. 270, Ref.; (2) that the intention of the testator was, however, that there should be successive absolute estates and estates in tail male in respect of each of the legatees mentioned in the will. If the daughter had sons, they would become owners of the whole property, but if she had no sons, the surviving near relations in his family would be the heirs after the death of his daughter. His daughter became a widow in 1908 and had no issue. One of his widows died in 1897 and the other in 1918. In 1923 his daughter adopted a son.

Held, (1) that the gift in favour of the daughter's sons was invalid as it was a bequest to unborn persons ; (2) that the bequest to the surviving relations in the testator's family was void as being vague and indefinite ; and (3) that even if the testator intended to exclude an adopted son, such a direction would be void as being contrary to the principles of Hindu Law, and that the adopted son therefore succeeded to the estate to the exclusion of the reversioners, as if there had been an intestacy. A Hindu talugdar of Oudh who had made an irrevocable declaration under S. 10 of the Oudh Settled Estate Act (1900), executed a will bequeathing all his property to the son who might be born from his wife M but if no son were born to her, the property was to go to M as owner or malik. He authorised M to make a will in favour of any descendant of RS. He also gave her power to adopt a son from among the descendants of RS or to make a gift of the property to such a person, but he directed that M had no power to make a gift or will in favour of any other person. The testator died without any son being born to him from M.

Held, (1) that M took an absolute estate in the properties and not merely a life-estate as Hindu widow; (2) that though the testator purported to cut down M's absolute power of bequest or gift, there was no attempt to cut down her power of making other transfers, such as sales, mortgages, or leases, and according to the principle of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." M's power to make such transfers was not restricted; (3) that the existence of these powers of bequest and gift, though restricted, was inconsistent with the notion of a life-estate; (4) that the power of adoption conferred on M was not inconsistent with the notion an absolute estate. ———Will—Construction—Gift over "in the event of any sons dying without leaving male issue him surviving"—Death issueless, at any time and not merely in testator's lifetime—Succession Act, Ss. 131 and 124.

The testator, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga Law, executed a will, bequeathing the whole of his residuary estate to his sons in the manner following:—"I devise and bequeath the whole of my estate—in trust for such of my sons as shall be living at my death—and also for the son or sons of such of my sons as shall then be dead (such son or son taking the share their or his father would have taken hereunder, had they or he been then alive)—equally as tenants in-common and the said sons or sons of my sons taking equally per stirpes as tenants-in-common, but nevertheless in the event of any sons or sons' son, dying without leaving lineal male issue, him surviving, the other of my son or sons or son's sons living at the time shall be equally entitled to his or their share of the property as he or they would inherit under the Hindu Law". The testator died in 1904, leaving his widow and two sons S and A him surviving. The elder son S died in 1930 intestate without any male issue, but leaving him surviving his widow (the plaintiff) as his sole heiress under the Dayabhaga Law and an infant daughter. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit against the surviving son A, claiming that on a true construction of the will, her husband S had become absolutely entitled to his equal half share of the residuary estate, and that on his death intestate, his half share devolved upon herself as sole heiress.

Held (negativing the plaintiff's contention) that, on a true construction of the will as a whole, S. 131 and not S. 124 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, was applicable and that the half-share of S, on his death without male issue, passed under the gift over to the younger son A (the defendant). The words "dying without leaving lineal male issue him surviving" are prima facie to be construed in their literal significance as referring to death at any time, and not merely in the lifetime of the testator. The question is one entirely of intention and though this rule of interpretation will yield to any sufficient intention to a contrary effect to be found in the language of the will taken as a whole, there was in the will in dispute no indication of a contrary intention sufficient to displace the prima facie meaning of the words used in that clause. ———Will—Contingent interest, vested interest and spes successionis—Meaning of.

An estate or interest is vested, as distinguished from contingent, either when enjoyment of it is presently conferred or when its enjoyment is postponed, the time of enjoyment will certainly come to pass; in other words an estate or interest is vested when there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present right of future enjoyment. An estate or interest is contingent, if the right of enjoyment is made to depend upon some event or a condition, which may or may not happen or be performed, or if in the case of a gift to take effect in the future, it cannot be ascertained in the meantime, whether there will be any one to take the gift; in other words, an estate or interest is contingent, when the right of enjoyment is to accrue, on an event which is dubious or uncertain. And as regards certainty, the law does not regard as uncertain the event of a person attaining a given age or of the death of somebody beyond which his enjoyment is postponed; because if he lives long enough, the event is sure to happen. HINDU WIDOWS' RE-MARRIAGE ACT (XV OF 1856)—Applicability—Widow already entitled to re-marry.

The Act was intended to render re marriage valid and to legalize the legitimacy of children. It conferred a benefit on those who could not re-marry but at the same time imposed a restriction on them. It was not intended to deprive those who already possessed the right to re-marry, of whatever rights they enjoyed in their deceased husband's properties. ———S. 2—Alienation by widow—Subsequent re-marriage—Effect of.

An alienation by a Hindu widow of the property of her deceased husband for purposes not binding on the estate ceases to be effective on her re marriage, even if such re marriage be permitted by the custom of her caste and the next reversioner is entitled, on her re-marriage, to possession of the property as against the alienee. The effect of the section is this—that, on the re-marriage of the widow, the next heirs shall succeed to the husband's property, which must be his property unaffected by any alienation which the widow could make but which would bind not the husband's estate but only her own interest in it. The intention of the section is that a Hindu widow who marries a second time shall no longer derive any benefit from her first husband's estate but that the benefit of that estate shall go to the next reversioner. There is no analogy as regards the rights of the alienee between surrender and re-marriage. (1911) 1 M.W.N. 82, Foll.; 8 C.L.J. 542, 26 Mad. 143 and 19 Cal. 289, Ref. ———S. 2—Applicability — "Any widow"—Widow embracing Mahomedanism and marrying Mahomedan —If forfeits estate.

The expression "any widow" in S. 2 of the Act includes all widows who being Hindus became widows and is wide enough to cover the case of such a widow re marrying a Hindu or a member of another religion. A Hindu widow who therefore becomes a convert to Mahomedanism and then marries a Mahomedan forfeits whatever interest she has in her husband's property. S. 2 would apply to her notwithstanding her renunciation of faith and subsequent marriage with a non-Hindu. ———S. 2—Marriage by custom—Forfeiture of estate.

S. 2 does not apply to the case of those widows who are entitled under the custom of their caste to re-marry and are not bound to take advantage of the provisions of the Act. Accordingly, there is no forfeiture of the Hindu widow's estate on re-marriage under the Act in such a case nor can such forfeiture ensue as a matter of equity as it is against natural justice. The proof of mere custom of re-marriage would not be sufficient to involve forfeiture under the Hindu Law and that it would be necessary for the party claiming that the estate has been forfeited on account of re marriage to prove that there is a custom of such forfeiture in such a contingency. ———S. 3—Effect of re-marriage on mother's right of guardianship.

Misrepresentation inducing consent to marry cannot upset a marriage. The position in law is that the party imposed upon must be deceived to such an extent that there is in reality no consent at all to the marriage. Such consent cannot be given by a child of nine years of age and consequently a person who, though 54 years old, is found by the Court to be very feeble-minded and to have the mentality of a child of nine years of age is incapable of giving his consent. Where income derived by a Zamindar from the lease of the right to fish in a number of tanks and connected supply channels in the Zamindari the water in which was used for agricultural purposes, was assessed to income-tax and it was contended that income from the fisheries was exempt from the assessment to income-tax on the grounds that they were not so assessable under the terms of the sanad granted to the Zamindar and that the said income was agricultural income especially in view of the definition of rent in S. 3 (11) (b) of the Madras Estates Land Act.

Held, (1) that following Privy Council ruling in 57 I. The mortgagee who carried a money-lending business advanced a loan and the transaction was embodied in indentures. One of these was described as a zarpeshgi lease with usufructuary mortgage. "The mortgagee lessee was to be in possession of the properties, and, in his relation to the cultivators of the soil he stood in the position of landlord, dealing directly with them and collecting the rents. He had moreover to pay the Government revenue, cesses and taxes and his name was registered in the Land Registration Department. He alone was able to sue for rent whether current or arrears, to sue for enhancement or for ejectment and was able to settle lands with raiyats and tenants in all the properties; in fact he was in a position to take all proceedings which the mortgagor would have been able to take in the ordinary course if the lands leased and mortgaged had remained in her khas possession."

Held, that the thika profits which formed part of the rents were agricultural income within the meaning of S. 2, (1) (a) and as such were exempt from assessment.

Held, further, that the fact that the recipient was a money-lender did not matter, as the business of money-lending may bring in an income which is exempt from income tax on the ground that it is derived from agricultural land. amount so paid to the subscribers in excess of their subscriptions was called "guaranteed interest" which the fund claimed to be entitled to deduct from its income in computing its taxable profits. It was assumed for the purpose of the reference that the transactions of the fund were confined to its members though the rules provided for loans also to non-subscribers and to registered Co operative Societies.

Held, (i) that the ruling in Styles' case had no application to the case and the guaranteed interest was part of the profits; but (ii) that the fund was not really a company, the amount of recurring subscriptions paid periodically by the shareholders or subscribers was not share capital or borrowed capital as ordinarily understood. When the Act by S. 3 subjects to charge "all income" of an individual, it is what reaches the individual as income which it is intended to charge. Where, therefore, a decree of the Court charges the assessee's whole resources with a specific payment to his step-mother, it to that extent diverts his income from him, and directs it to his step mother; to that extent what he receives for her is not his income. It is not a case of the application by the assessee of part of his income in a particular way; it is rather the allocation of a sum out of his revenue before it becomes income in his hands. (1901) A. ——S. 4—Business profits arising abroad—Assessee carrying business and residing in India—Liability to tax—Test—Contracts settled by payment of differences and not actual delivery—Effect.

S. 4 of the Income-tax Act deals with the place where the profits accrue or arise and not the place where the person who is the ultimate source of profit resides or carries on business. The fact that profits arising under contracts made abroad depend on the exercise in British India of knowledge, skill and judgment on the part of the assessee and upon instructions emanating from British India cannot involve that the profits accrue or arise in British India, when they are not received in British India. Assessee had a business of his own in Bombay and also did business on foreign exchange. He sent orders by telegram from Bombay to his broker at foreign places, and the latter executed the orders as a broker on behalf of the assessee, and on the transactions being put through, informed the assessee of the same. In most of the contracts, no actual sale and purchase or delivery of articles took place, there being only payment of differences. The assessee, as a result of these transactions, earned a large amount of profits, which were not brought into or received in British India, but they were sought to be assessed on the ground that they accrued or arose in British India.

Held, that it made no difference in law whether the contracts of sale and purchase were followed, or intended to be followed, by actual delivery of commodities or whether the contracts were intended to be closed and were closed, by corresponding contracts of sale and purchase, so as to result merely in payment of differences: that the profits did not accrue or arise in British India and were not therefore taxable. ——S. 4—"Interest arising or accruing"—Substitution of a new mortgage for an existing debt—Arrears of interest outstanding on previous mortgage, whether deemed realised when new mortgage granted—Interest not taxable until mortgage realised by sale of property in execution of mortgage decree.

A mortgagee, carrying on a money-lending business, accepted a new mortgage in July, 1904, for a capital sum representing the principal and arrears of interest then due under a previous mortgage of 1894, thereby discharging the old mortgage. The mortgagee's accounts, kept on a cash basis, did not show the arrears of interest as realised in the year 1904. In December, 1917, the mortgagee obtained a decree on the mortgage of July 1904, and in execution thereof, the mortgaged property was purchased by the mortgagee-decree holder himself (with the permission of the Court) in November 1924, and January, 1925, and the sales confirmed by the Court in December, 1925.

Held, that for purposes of assessment to income-tax, the interest must be deemed to have been received and realised by the mortgagee, not when the new mortgage of 1904 was granted, nor at the date of the Court-sale, but on the date when the sale was confirmed by the Executing Court under O. 21, R. 92, C. P. Code. The transaction of 1904, was in effect the substitution of a further and better security for the old, and the mortgagee did not by virtue of that transaction receive payment then and there of the arrears of interest outstanding on the previous mortgage, and he was not therefore liable to be taxed on this sum as being income received when the new mortgage was granted; the sum representing the arrears of interest (though after 1904 secured by the new mortgage) continued to retain its character as such down to the time of the judicial sales, and when the mortgagee as the result of the judicial sales received payment in account of the sum due under the mortgage of July, 1904, he then recevied payment for the first time of the arrears of interest included in that sum.

Held, accordingly, that the sales having been confirmed and become absolute in December, 1925, the mortgagee was liable to pay income-tax for the year 1926 1927 on the arrears of interest as being profits or gains of his money-lending business in the previous year, 1925-1926. 5 T.C. 159; 14 T.C. 22 and 1933 A.C. 139, distinguished judgment of the High Court, 9 Pat. 48, Affir. On the 15th January, 1927 the Saigon branch of the petitioner's business, which had considerable accumulated profits but only a small cash balance in hand, in response to an urgent demand from the Rangoon branch raised a sum of money by borrowing from local money-lenders and remitted it to Rangoon. Within a few days the Saigon branch paid off the loans out of the mixed funds of the business before the return of the loan from Rangoon. by the assessee that the life annuity payments must be considered as payment by instalments of a capital purchase sum and secondly, that the payment should be considered as derived from the estate and therefore exempt from taxation under S. 4 as agricultural income.

Held, (1) that an owner of capital might exchange it for an income which was taxable, or for another form of capital which was not taxable and the question whether what was obtained in exchange should be considered as taxable depended upon the nature of the transaction in the particular case. ——S. 4 (1)—Income accruing in British India—Assessees acting as agents at Bombay for a company at Indore—Commission paid in fact at Indore—Test of assessability.

The assessees were a firm carrying on business in Bombay and acting as general agents for a company at Indore. By the terms of the agreement between them, the agents were entitled to a commission on sales effected by them and to retain that commission out of the proceeds. But as a matter of fact, all the proceeds were sent to Indore by the Bombay firm and the commission was paid only at Indore. On a question arising whether the commission was "money arising or accruing in British India", held, that the fact that the commission might have been segregated and paid in British India indicated that the income accrued in British India and was assessable accordingly. The income being commission upon sales made in Bombay, does accrue or arise in British India, and none the less so, because as a matter of practice between the parties, it is paid in Indore, and the ultimate right to it arises under an agreement made in Indore. 32 Bom.L.R. 671, Dist. The Pondicherry Railway Company worked the railway in the French territory but they had an office at Trichinopoly in British India where the agent received the gross proceeds of the line from that place; the agent transmitted the net profits to the London office.

Where there are two funds in the assessee's foreign business, one of which has already been subjected to income tax in British India and another which is still liable to income-tax, it may be reasonable to presume that a remittance made to British India was out of the fund that had already been taxed. That, however, is not an irrebuttable presumption and where the book entries of the assessee himself show that the whole of the fund which had been subjected to income-tax was invested with the constituents of the assessee's firm and so remained at the time when the remittance in question was made to British India so that the remittance could not possibly have been a part of that fund, the presumption if any, in favour of the assessee is rebutted and the general presumption applies, namely, that the remittance was out of profits liable to be taxed. During the period of assessee's employment the company was paying him a monthly salary as well as a half-yearly cash bonus out of its profits, and income-tax was being collected on these amounts. The company had constituted an Officers' Retiring Fund and made rules for its management. The company allotted every half-year out of its profits a certain sum to the credit of this fund and invested the same; the amount together with the interest earned was apportioned between such of its officers as were admitted to the benefits of the fund in proportion to their salaries and the amounts credited to each officer where shown in a separate pass book given to him. The company undertook to pay the amount lying to the credit of an officer to him on his leaving its service after having previously served continuously and satisfactorily for a certain period, and in the event of his death, whether during or after the said period of service, to his legal representatives. In the event of an officer leaving the company's service or being dismissed before completing the said period of service, he was to have no claim whatever to the amount lying to his credit in the fund, and the same was to be apportioned to the credit of other officers then in the employ of the company. The last rule declared the right of the directors of the company to decide in their discretion which of the officers shall be eligible for the benefits of the fund, and to make any alteration or addition to the rules, and that the director's decisions on these points and also as to the meaning of the rules and on all other matters connected with the fund of its administration shall be final and conclusive. The amount received by the assessee on his retirement out of this fund was sought to be assessed.

Held (per Cornish and Pandrang Row, JJ., Beasley, C.J., contra).—The payment to the assessee on his retirement from the company's service was in substance and in truth the payment of a lump sum in lieu of pension, i.e., in consideration of his past services. It was not of the nature of a periodical return ; it was a unique receipt not to be repeated. It was not a source from which periodical monetary returns could come in so far as the employee was concerned. The only return he could expect was a single payment on retirement and that the receipt of the lump sum in question was not income and as such not assessable. (Case-law referred.)

Per Beasley, C.J.—This amount must be regarded as sums set apart periodically, that is to say, half-yearly, by the Company in respect of present services rendered by the assessee as an addition to salary under S. 7 (1) of the Act. Instead of being actually paid then they were allowed to accumulate and were paid to him in a lump sum on his retirement and, being accumulations of sums credited to him for present services, the fact that they were paid to him at the end of his service in a lump sum did not make any difference and as such they were assessable. ———S. 4 (3) (vii)—Money lender—Assignment of mortgage to—Decree on—Purchase of mortgaged properties in satisfaction of decree—Subsequent sale for profit—Profits, if exempt from tax.

The assessee, a professional money-lender got an assignment of a mortgage from another, sued on the mortgage and having obtained a decree for a large amount, took possession of the mortgaged properties in satisfaction of the decree. Later on he sold the properties for cash and made a large profit out of the transaction. On the net profits being assessed to income-tax, the assessee claimed exemption under S. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income-tax Act, on the ground that the transaction was not one in the course of his business, but an isolated venture, speculative and casual in nature.

Held, that though at the inception, the mortgage loan was not actually advanced by the assessee, the subsequent advance of an amount for getting an assignment of the mortgagee's rights was certainly a venture coming within the generally recognised ambit of the money-lending business and could not be deemed to be so disconnected with the profession of a money lender as to take it out of the category of business carried on by the assessee. The fact that a particular transaction in money-lending business was speculative did not take it out of its category. Moreover though it was an isolated transaction, speculative in character it was not essentially different in nature from the assessee's other transactions, and it could not be said that it was not entered upon as a matter of bussiness. Hence, the profits derived were in respect of a transaction connected with his money-lending business and liable to taxation. (*Beasley, C. The assessee financed the litigation and X won his appeal. The Income-tax department assessed the additional sum received by the assessee to income-tax. It was contended for the assessee that under the above circumstances the additional sum cannot be considered to be income, profit or gain from business within the meaning of S. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income-tax Act, and that it is an income of a casual nature and should be deemed to have been exempted by the aforesaid section. Overruling the contention,

Held, that though there was an element of speculation in the transaction, it cannot be gainsaid that the transaction was one of loan from which the lender expected to derive considerable pecuniary profit, and so the transaction, amounted to business within the meaning of S. 10 of the Income-tax Act. Assessee who was in the service of Company A, as a purser, was afterwards taken into the service of Company B, who had at some time acted as agent of Company A. There was an understanding, but no formal or legal contract, that assessee would be paid a gratuity on termination of service if the same was satisfactory. The fund, however, was entirely at the disposal of the Company B. The Company, however, went into liquidation and the assessee lost his employment as well as the gratuity. But a stranger who was interested in the Companies A and B paid the assessee the gratuity which he would have received if Company B had not become insolvent. Income tax was claimed on this amount under Ss. 6 (vi) and 12 of the Income tax Act.

Held, that the sum in question was not income derived from "other sources" under S. 6 (vi) or "salary" under S. 7 (1), and was not assessable to income-tax under S. 6, S. 7 or S. 12 of the Act; that the amount was not a receipt arising from the exercise of an occupation by the assessee, but was of a causal and non recurring nature, and was consequently exempt from income-tax under S. 4 (3) (vii). The assessee who was an Assistant Engineer in Government service was compulsorily retired four years before his retiring age. He along with others similarly compulsorily retired, presented memorials to the Government of India and the Secretary of State setting forth their grievances and this resulted in an order by which the assessee was to receive as compensation (1) a lump sum equivalent to two thirds of the difference between the amount received by him in pension from the date on which he was discharged to the date of attaining 55 years of age and the amount he would have received in pay had he been retained in service up to that date, and (2) with effect from his 55th birthday the pension which he would have received had he remained in service up to that day. The income-tax authorities sought to assess a sum received by the assessee under head (1) of the order to income-tax.

An arrangement was entered into between A and his son B for the management of his estate consisting of a lease granted to A by Government and in which the son had a share. It was agreed that the management of the estate was to rest in the father, that the son was entitled to a residence in the estate and manage it under the directions of his father. The father had absolute right to fix his own as well as his son's allowance and that the son was to receive his allowance only if he actually resided in the estate. The father was not bound to reside there permanently and that after deducing the expenses including allowances, the income was to be divided between them in a certain proportion. The Income-tax Officer assessed the whole of the allowance granted to the son to tax as salary within the meaning of S. 7, Income-tax Act.

Held, that the son was entitled to treat that part of his income as agricultural which he received as of right by virtue of the ownership of his share; and that only the surplus could be treated as salary and therefore taxable as he received it for managing the father's estate. The income and profits from immovable property are to be ascertained by finding out the sum for which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year. Where the immovable property consists of a number of market stalls this is to be done by ascertaining the annual value of each of the stalls which in the aggregate make up the property to be assessed. In determining what that annual value is, the Income-tax Officer must have regard to the facts of the particular case under enquiry. One of such factors is the actual daily rent for each of the stalls. ———S. 9—'Annual value'—Meaning—Mode of ascertainment.

The phrase "annual value" whether in Income tax Acts or wherever else it appears in connection with rating or taxation means the same thing, i.e, "the sum for which the property may reasonably be expected to let from year to year." The annual value of a house means the annual money benefit derivable from it by the owner.

Per Addison, J.—What the landlord has been able to collect for past year is a fair measure of what the property may reasonably be expected to let for from year to year

INCOME-TAX ACT (1922), S. 9.

Per Dalip Singh, J.—The sum for which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year is a notional amount and has nothing to do with the rent actually received by the owner. A good way of arriving at the notional sum would be the correct average of the rents paid for similar and similarly situated buildings in any given area. The sum for which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year does not mean the sum that the most grasping landlord can secure from the most necessitous tenant but is the sum which migh reasonably be expected to be paid for that building from year to year regard being had to the rents paid for similar and similarly situated buildings in that locality. If circumstances make it impossible or inconvenient to apply this method, other factors may be taken into consideration. One of the more important ones is the length of time for which the landlord had been able to shift the burden on to the tenants of the taxation. A long time might well lead to the inference that the notional rent included that amount of the tax. Per Tek Chand, J.—The question in such cases does not admit of a general answer. The provisions of the Municipal Act in force in a particular locality and the relevant notification under which the tax is an important bearing on the decision in question.

Per Addison, J.—The question is one of fact and not of law, namely, what as a fact was the sum for which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year. But if and so far as tha actual bargain made by the parties is considered as evidence of the amount which a hypothetical tenant would give or the landlord reasonably expect to get, the figure which matters is the figure which represents the whole of the consideration exacted by the landlord for the right to use and occupy the property —comprising not merely the rent paid by the tenant as such but also the tax paid to the corporation by the tenant. A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 320, Diss.

The owner's share of Municipal tax payable under S. 149 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, is not a tenant's tax. The discharge thereof is a benefit to the owner. It is a liability of the owner and if under the agreement it is paid oft by the tenant, it represents part of the consideration received by the landlord and has got to be included in the computation of the annual value of the premises. In calculating the annual value of property under S. 9, no deduction can be made on account of the municipal tax payable thereon under S. 149 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. (*Rankin, C.J., C. C. The word "residence" in S. 9 (2), proviso, of the Indian Income-tax Act, bears the ordinary meaning, i.e., the place where a human being eats, drinks and sleeps or where his family and servants eat, drink or sleep, or where there is some permanence or continuance of such eating, drinking and sleeping. extended meaning, which it bears in the case of a company, namely, the place where the company keeps house and does business. There is no justification for applying the word to a fictional person such as that of a limited liability company. Consequently, a building owned by a Stock Exchange Association, which is partly occupied by its offices, and partly let out to its members for their business, but not used by them for their residence, does not constitute "residence" under the proviso to S. 9 (2). An assessee took over from the debtor in satisfaction of a loan, six items of property movable and immovable amounting in all to Rs. 20,74,943. Assuming that these six items might be treated as money's worth, it was contended that the sum which far exceeded the total amount of interest due on the loan must be treated as applicable in the first place to the discharge of the debtor's liability for interest.

Held, here there was an arrangement affecting the whole indebtedness whereby certain assets were accepted in part satisfaction and promissory notes were taken for the balance that the basis of the presumption, namely, that it is to the creditors' advantage to attribute payments to interest in the first place, leaving the interest-bearing capital outstanding was gone. Moreover, if the question were one between the debtor and the creditor (i.e., assessee), the assessee might up to the last moment appropriate the above mentioned amount to capital account, for in a question with the revenue the taxpayer is entitled to appropriate payments as between capital and interest in the manner least disadvantageous to himself. Having regard to the nature of the transaction, the assessee is entitled to say that he has accepted the first six items in discharge pro tanto of his debtor's capital liability and the capital debt now stands discharged to that extent. No part of the sum of Rs. 20,74,973 was received by the assessee as taxable income in the year of computation. Assessee, a company, carried on business in motor accessories at several places and also in a mica mine at another place. The latter was, however, stopped on account of a cyclone. With a view to resume that business the company did some prospecting work and incurred expenses on account of salary, wages, legal expenses, depreciation, etc, but the mica business was not resumed in fact. The company claimed that the expenses incurred in attempting to re-start the mica business should be deducted against the profits and gains of the other business.

Held, that in effect what happens in such cases is that the assessees are content to stay their hands in connexion with the recovery of the loan and interest under the old transaction in consideration of the obligation undertaken by the debtors under the new promissory note which consists of the interest due under the old loan which is capitalised for the purpose of the new transaction. In other words, the assessees were investing the old interest as capital in the new loan. Art. 88 provided that at any time after the company shall have carried on business for three years, the divisible profits of the company may be divided amongst those members only who shall have become members of the company during the first two years of its existence. This article was not acted upon and no division of profits had in fact been made. Where a guardian or trustee carries on a business, though the persons ultimately deriving the benefit of the business may be some wards or beneficiaries, or as in this case partly the guardian and partly the minors, the business can be regarded as a business carried on by the trustee or guardian and can be assessed as a single business. This virtually amounts to saying that where the business is carried on by one person on behalf of a number of individuals, the whole group of individuals, on whose behalf the business is carried on can be assessed through the person who carries the business. Where there is no Hindu joint family but still on account of the minority of sharers, the sharers have all to be looked after by a common guardian and the business is carried on with the properties of the tenants-in-common put together with the advantages of such condition the Crown can assess the person carrying on the business under S. 10 (1). S. 10 of the Income tax Act deals only with business which are being carried on and not businesses which have ceased to be carried on. A company can carry on several distinct and separate businesses and it must always be a question of fact whether those businesses are separate or so interlocked with the main chief business of the company as to be really one business. If separate businesses are carried on during the year of account, the profits and gains of each of them separately will have to be arrived under S. 10 (1) and (2) of the Act after making the allowances given in sub-S. (2); and the loss, if any, in any one or more of the businesses would under S. 24 of the Act, be set-off against the profits and gains of the more successful businesses arrived at in the same way and the aggregate income computed. But an assessee company cannot adopt this course in the present case, because S. 10 only deals with businesses which are being carried on and not businesses which have ceased to be carried on as was the case here. Hence the assessee company was not entitled to set off the losses, as claimed by it which were of a capital nature, against the income from dividends. 52 Mad. 296=55 M.L.J. 600 (F.B.) Expl. ——S. 10 (2) (vi)—Scope—Assessee acquiring property by bequests—Determination of original cost.

It is not intended by the legislature that no allowance should be made for depreciation of "buildings, machinery, plant or furniture" belonging to the assessee merely because the assessee had acquired title to the property by bequest and not by purchase. The intention of the legislature in using the words "the original cost thereof to the assessee," is that the owner to be assessed should not receive an allowance for depreciation based on a capital value of the property higher than or different from the value of the property to the assessee at the time when he originally acquired it. If the assessee purchased the property, the best evidence of the value of the property to the assessee would be the price that he paid for it, but where the assessee acquires the property otherwise than by purchase (e.g., by bequest) "the original cost thereof to the assessee" means, and is, the real value of the property at the time when the assessee acquired it less the expenditure (probate charges actually paid) necessary for the purpose of completing the title.

At the end of each trading year when a fair estimate of the profits was available or in some years, after the amount of profits had been ascertained, the fees to the Directors were fixed by a resolution of the company and that approximately at two-thirds of the gross profits.

Held, (i) that the mere production of a resolution fixing the remuneration of the Directors and vouchers for payment of the amounts so fixed did not preclude further enquiry by the Commissioner and entitle the company to the deduction claimed; (ii) that having regard to the complete identity of the persons interested as shareholders in fixing the fees and of the persons to whom the fees were to be paid, and to the refusal of the directors to allow themselves to be examined as to how the amount was fixed, the company had failed to discharge the onus under Ss. 14 and 25; and (iii) that the Magistrate was justified in holding it not proved that the amount was exclusively incurred in the production of the assessable income. No doubt the value of the land taken over in liquidation of debts due to the assessee as set out in the assessee's books of account may be treated as prima facie evidence of its true value, and the assessee normally would have no cause of complaint if the income tax authorities accepted for income tax purposes the value which the assessee himself had put upon his assets in his books of account. But in every case, it is incumbent upon the Income-tax Officer to ascertain as a matter of fact what are the real profits and gains of the business in the accounting year. Thus if the estimated value of the lands in the accounting year is greater than the principal sum that was lent, the income-tax authorities will be entitled to treat the balance, after deducting an amount equivalent to the loan, as representing profits and gains accruing from the transaction, and to assess the same as income chargeable with income-tax. But if the estimated value of the lands is less than the amount of the principal sum that has been lent, no tax will be chargeable in the accounting year in which the lands are transferred, although it may be that the estimated value of the lands in that year exceeds the amount due to the assessee in respect of interest on the loan. But as the assessment is made upon the footing that the transaction has been completed during the accounting year, the assessee is not entitled to have the value of the lands re-assessed in any other accounting year except that in which the lands are sold by him, and until the sale takes place the final adjustment of the assessment must necessarily remain in suspense. No doubt the Income-tax Officer is the sole arbiter for determining under the proviso to S. 13 of the Income-tax Act how the profits are to be computed. But it is a question of law, into which the High Court is entitled to inquire, whether there is any evidence on which the Income-tax Officer could come to the decision that the method of accounting adopted by the assessee is such that the gains could not be computed except by the arbitrary method contemplated by the proviso. If there was no evidence to justify the Income-tax Officer's rejection of that method of accounting, the assessment should be made under first part of S. 13 and not under the proviso. When there is no other reason except the fact of reduced profit to justify the assumption that profits cannot properly be deduced, from a method of accounting which admittedly has been regularly employed by the assessee and has been accepted in the past, the use of the proviso to S. 13 for the purpose of introduction of an arbitrary manner of computing the profits is not justified. S. 14 (1) of the Income tax Act can apply only if two conditions are made out. ——S. 14 (1)—Construction and scope—"As a member of a Hindu undivided family"—Meaning—Allowance received by member of joint family—If taxable.

INCOME-TAX ACT (1922), S. 14 (1).

The Income-tax Act clearly contemplates that in the case of members of a joint Hindu family the unit of taxation shall be the family itself and not each individual member, i e., the entire joint income of the members of the family is taxable only in the hands of the family and no part of it is taxable in the hands of the individual coparceners. This provides the clue to the meaning of the words "as a member of a Hindu undivided family" occurring in S. 14 (1) of the Act. S. 14 (1) exempts from taxation in the hands of a member of a family income which is liable to taxation in the hands of the family, whether it has been so taxed or not. In this view of the matter the burden is on the assessee to show that the sum in respect of which he claims exemption is assessable in the hands of the family.

Quaere,—Whether an allowance paid to a member of an undivided family and not exempted from assessment under S. 14 (1) may not be exempted on some other ground. (*Courtney Terrell, C. ———S. 14 (1)—Exemption under—Burden of proof.

S. 14 (1) merely relieves the assessee from showing that the sum in respect of which he claims exemption has already been taxed in the hands of the family It does not relieve him from the necessity of showing that the sum received is a part of income, or property, in which he had a vested right as a member of a Hindu undivided family. ———S. 14 (1)—Impartible Raj—Hindu family possessed of—Maintenance received by junior member—Exemption from income-tax.

An assessee claiming exemption under S. 14 (1) of the Income-tax Act should establish that he is a member of a Hindu undivided family and further that the sum in question has been received by him as such. A junior member of a joint family possessed of impartible Raj is a member of a Hindu undivided family within the meaning of S. 14 (1), as the custom of impartibility does not supersede the general law so far as his status is concerned, though his rights to demand partition and to participate in the income of the estate is taken away. If such a member is assessed to income-tax on the amount of the maintenance received by him from the holder of the impartible Raj the question for consideration is whether the allowance received by him is a payment made to him as a member of the family. If the sum be considered to be in the nature of a gift, pure and simple, it cannot be characterised as income received by a member of a Hindu undivided family as such. If the assessee is, by custom applicable to the estate, entitled to be maintained, with the revenue of the estate, and if the allowance fixed for him is in satisfaction of his right to be so maintained he should be considered to have received it as a member of a Hindu undivided family. A junior member claiming to be entitled to maintenance must establish a custom to that effect. In the case of a younger son, his right of maintenance has been so often asserted and recognized that a Court is entitled to presume that such a right exists. The presumption however is not conclusive but can be rebutted. It is open to the income-tax department to offer proof that such a custom does not exist in this family. It is now well established that in the case of an impartible Raj, the fact that the holder for the time is exclusively entitled to the estate is not inconsistent with other members of the family being joint with him. Where the assessee, a junior member of an impartible Raj, asserts that he is joint with the holder of the Raj (his brother), and his assertion is not controverted by the Commissioner of Income-tax except in so far as it follows from the view he takes of the law governing impartible estates but which view is unsustainable. it must be taken that the assessee is joint with the holder for purposes of S. 14 (1). If the officer had been of opinion that the transactions in suspense accounts were not temporary deposits and withdrawals for which no interest was charged, but were loan transactions resulting in profits to the assessees he might have included such profits under S. 23 (3) in the assessment made by him. Where the Income tax Officer does not get proper material on which to find out the true income of an assessee, it is in the interest of the State to guess the income of the assessee. The assessee cannot complain that he has been over taxed if owing to his own failure, the officer is not able to do justice towards him. But where the proper materials are before the Officer, he should utilise them and make an assessment under S. 23 (3) which is liable to be re-examined in appeal. When an assessment is made more or less on matters which have been guessed out, there cannot be a proper appeal. There would be no sense in substituting the Income-tax Officer's 'guess' by his superior officer's 'guess'. Where the Income-tax Officer is to make an assessment to the best of his judgment it should not be an assessment by way of penalty; his judgment ought to proceed on some data, including legitimate presumptions arising from non-production of the account books. It should be borne in mind that an assessment under S. 23 (4) should not be influenced by a desire to punish the assessee for non-compliance with a notice under S. 22 or S. 23 however culpable such non-compliance may be. Any deliberate concealment or misstatement of the particulars of his income by the assessee is made punishable by S. 28; and if his act amounts to an offence under that Section, he should be tried and convicted if the offence is proved, in which case the law gives him a right to appeal, but to punish him indirectly by making a so-called best judgment assessment is wholly unwarranted. Where the assessee's books are available for the preceding and subsequent years in making an assessment to the best of judgment, the Income-tax Officer may draw inferences from receipts in those years, so as to form a satisfactory basis for the assessment. S. 30, proviso expressly declares that there shall be no appeal from an assessment to the best of the Income-tax Officer's judgment under S. 23 (4) or under that subsection read with S. 27. Accordingly no question of law or fact arising from such assessment can be the subject of consideration by the Assistant Commissioner for the simple reason that no appeal lies to him, with the result that the Assistant Commissioner can never have an occasion to pass in appeal an order under S. 31 in relation to a best judgment assessment. The High Court can require the Commissioner to make a reference for decision by the High Court of a question of law only if it arises from an order under S. 31. The High Court has no power to require the Commissioner to state a case for the decision by the High Court of questions of law arising from an assessment under S. 23 (4) of the Act. Any question of law which arises from the best judgment assessment, sought to be set aside by an application under S. 27 cannot fall within the purview of S. 27. So, the question whether a wholly arbitrary assessment under S 23 (4) on assumed income or on conjectural estimate thereof involves an error of law cannot be the subject of reference under the orders of the High Court. It is not open to the Assistant Commissioner to express the opinion that the Income-tax Officer should not have assessed to the best of his judgment under S. 23 (4) if the latter stated in his order that a case existed for assessment to the best of his judgment. Any abuse of power by the Income-tax Officer or perversity of judgment is to be corrected by the Commissioner in revision, but the Assistant Commissioner has no jurisdiction, where he has before him what purports to be an appeal from an assessment under S. 23 (4). It is only if he has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal that he can say whether the assessment was perverse or arbitrary. An assessment in default is a very serious thing; and unless it is open to the Court to insist that notices under Ss. 23 (2) and 22 (4) are given so as to afford reasonable opportunity to an assessee to comply with their requirements, the honest and diligent tax-payer will have no security for fair treatment and no remedy in the absence of fair treatment. Assessees who are not diligent or straightforward may no doubt be treated very strictly, but in such cases it is a plain and unnecessary mistake to order them to comply with the statutory requirements in an unreasonable time and to base an assessment in default upon their non-compliance. Where a notice is received at 3 p.m. on 18th of a month requiring the assessee to produce any evidence on which he might rely in support of his return on the 19th, the notice is not such a reasonable notice as law requires affording the assessee proper opportunity to comply with its return. *(Rankin, C.J., Pearson and S K. The mere fact that the assessment purports to have been made under that sub section does not shut out the appeal; it must be shown that the circumstances of the case bring it within the scope of that sub-section, and it is only when the Assistant Commissioner is satisfied that the assessment was made, not ostensibly but genuinely under that sub-section, that he must stay his hands and decline to adjudicate upon the merits of the appeal on the short ground that the proviso to S. 30 (1) bars an appeal in such case. His decision on this point and his rejection of the appeal are a proceeding in connexion with an assessment and it is the duty of the Commissioner if required by the assessee to state a case raising the question of law whether or not the facts established before the Assistant Commissioner are such as to bring the case within the ambit of proviso to S. 30 (1). 10 Lah. 596, Foll. Although the Act does not specifically provide for granting adjournments to comply with the terms of the notice served on the assessees under Ss. 22 (4) and 23 (2), in practice, adjournments are generally allowed for sufficient cause on the principle of justice, equity and good conscience. If therefore for any reason, a prayer for adjournment has to be refused a definite order, either oral or written, must be passed by the officer and communicated to the assessee or his agent, when he is present, before proceeding with the drastic action of summarily assessing him under S. 23 (4). Failure on the part of the Income-tax Officer in observing the aforesaid elementary principle of judicial procedure does, considerably detract from the technical legality of the summary assessment order recorded by him against the non-applicant. Both these conditions, which are questions of fact, must be satisfied before the members of a Company can be assessed to income-tax on their shares in the accumulated or undistributed profits. Although the Act nowhere in terms authorizes the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction is necessarily allowable. But they must be bad debts incurred in that particular year. S. 24 should be read in as liberal a manner as possible. Where there is a bona fide loss, a man can always set it off against his income, profits are gains under the same head, and in exceptional cases where the loss is so heavy that it more than counterbalances the whole of the profits under that head of income in order that the assessee may obtain his full relief.

Held, that the amount of rent of a certain property which was occupied by a tenant, who in spite of the efforts of the assessee (landlord) persisted in making default and which amount the landlord in a subsequent litigation had to forego in order to secure the eviction of the tenant is not liable to be taken into account as the income of the assessee in arriving at the total sum on which the assessment is to be made. The mere absence in the Act of a provision for loss in respect of a time-barred debt is no ground for disallowing it; but whether such loss could be claimed in any particular year or not is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case. Where therefore an assessee is being taxed personally, it is open to him to say that on a settlement of accounts of the old partnership, he treated the amount due by a partner as a loan made by him personally to that partner and that the loss which he consequently sustained on account of the failure of such partner to pay back loan is a loss which he is entitled to claim credit for in assessing the profit which he has made in respect of all kinds of business carried on by him in the year of assessment. This is permissible to him under S. 24. A I.R. 1932 P.C. 178, Rel. on. (Aston and Rupchand, A.J.Cs.) COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY v. KHEMCHAND RAMDAS. 6 I.R. Where two businesses are carried on and it is found on an account taken in accordance with S. 10 that there has been a loss in one business, that can be set off under S. 24 against the profits and gains of the other business whether it is of a similar or different nature. The assessee who was a money-lender had been a partner in two firms which were dissolved in 1929. On the distribution of the assets and liabilities of those firms liabilities amounting to a certain amount and representing the capital borrowed from third parties entirely for the purposes of the defunct firms had been allotted to his share. On that amaunt, he had during the year of account paid a sum as interest which he claimed to deduct from the profits and gains of the business carried on by him on his own account during the year.

Held, that the payment was a capital loss and not a trading loss and that the assessee was not entitled to the deduction claimed under S. 24. ——S. 24—When debt becomes bad, a question of fact—Assessee not sole arbiter to decide.

Whether a debt is a bad debt, and, if so, at what point of time it became a bad debt, are questions of fact, to be decided in the event of dispute by the appropriate tribunal, and not by the ipse dixit of any one else. The assessee has no option of declaring a debt as bad. The mere fact that a debt was incurred at a date beyond the period of limitation will not of itself make the debt a bad debt, still less will it fix the date at which it became a bad debt. A statute barred debt is not necessarily bad, neither is a debt which is not statute barred necessarily good. The age of the debt is no doubt a relevant matter to take into consideration. In every case it is a question of fact, to be determined after consideration of all relevant circumstances. (Lord Russell of Killowen.) COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, C. P. The assessee was the sole owner of a money-lending business and he was the capitalist partner with another in a separate cotton business. The cotton business failed and closed down with the ex-partner shown to be a debtor to that business in a certain sum of money. The assessee sought, in the year of account, to set off against his profits and gains of the money-lending business, the loss sustained by reason of his having had to take over the indebtedness of his ex-partner in the cotton business. This claim having been rejected by the income-tax authorities, the question was raised whether the ex partner's share of the loss in the cotton trade which the assessee had to bear could be set off against the assessee's other income, profits or gains, as a loss of profits or gains within the meaning of S. 24 of the Act.

Held, it is of course clear that where an assessee carries on more businesses than one, he is entitled to set off losses sustained by him in his other businesses against the profits and gains made in another business, the losses of course arising in the same year of account as the profits and gains of the business against which the losses are sought to be set off, that the loss sustained by him in having had to take over the indebtedness of his ex-partner in the other trade could not be set off against the profits and gains in his money-lending business. There was no bad debt owing by the ex-partner to the money-lending business because the money-lending business never lent any money to the ex-partner. If he had so lent and that had proved to be a bad debt, then the assessee's money-lending business could quite rightly have claimed to be allowed to set it off against its own profits and gains. In fact this was nothing more than a lending by the money-lending business to the cotton business and not to the ex partner. What had happened since the closing of the cotton trade was that the ex-partner had become a debtor of the assessee. He was not and never was a debtor of the money-lending business. He complied with the notice and all subsequent notices and was assessed on a taxable income. Against the assessment he preferred an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner and one of the grounds raised before that officer was that the joint family had been dissolved owing to the fact that a suit for partition had been instituted in 1926-1927 and was pending. The Assistant Commissioner held that inasmuch as the particular objection had not been raised before the Income-tax Officer it could not be raised before him in appeal and that therefore he could not decide it.

Held, (i) that the fact that at the time of making the assessment for 1928-1929 the question regarding the dissolution of the joint family was not raised before the Income-tax Officer debarred the assessee from raising the point in appeal; (ii) that the provisions of S. 30 (1) barred the Assistant Commissioner from entertaining the plea. S. 26 is designed for the purpose of making somebody assessable to income tax, and the whole scheme of the Act is not to assess two people at the same time, but is to find somebody who is either properly assessable or more conveniently assessable; and what S. 26 (2) says is that where a person who was not the former owner of a company is found to be owning that company in the year of assessment, that person is to be assessed. That is not only a convenient course, but seems to be a just one. Upon whom the burden is ultimately to fall is a matter of arrangement between the vendor company and the purchaser company. The word "assessment" is not confined to the definite act of making an order of assessment. Where a notice has been given under S. 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act to a person to furnish within the time specified a return in the prescribed form, the process of assessment has begun and continues until some order of assessment is made. The words "at the time of making the assessment" in S. 26 (2) therefore mean in the course of the process of assessment. Where at the date of his death, a person carrying on business had been served with a notice under S. 22 (2) and the time for furnishing the return had not expired and no return had been made, a person who succeeds to that business is taxable under S. 26 (2). ———S. 26 (2)—Successions to business—Meaning.

There can be sucession to a person without there being succession to that person's business; succession to a person is not the same thing as succession to a business. A person may be succeeded by another in a business in the sense that it is the same sort of business although not the same business. When one person is succeeded by another, there must be a wiping out of the original individual, i.e., the particular business activity together with all the old liabilities and assets appertaining to it must change hands. When A has not only taken over the actual business of B, but even the assets and liabilities, i.e., when there is a succession to B by A, then A should be liable to pay the income tax for the year during which the transfer takes place. Under English law, the income tax authorities pursue the business; under Indian law, they pursue the individual along with the business; and that is why the words "in such capacity" are to be found incorporated in S. 26 (2), Income-tax Act. The succession referred to in S. 26 (2) is in relation to a person's business. "Business" in S. 26 (2) is not business in abstract but is business in concrete. Meaning of words "succeeded" and "succession" explained. (Rupchand and Mehta, A.J.Cs.) COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX v. SIND LIGHT RY. Where no appeal lies under S. 31, no reference lies under S. 66 (2). An assessment made on B. & Co. in proper time and after the notices and returns under Ss. 22 and 23 was set aside by the High Court on the ground that the notice of assessment in so far as it mixed up the income of B. & Co. (an unregistered firm) with those of M. & Co. (a registered Company) was defective. In consequence thereof a fresh assessment was made by the Income-tax authorities on the assets of B. & Co. only. It was contended that by the time the second assessment was made more than one year had elapsed from the expiry of the tax year, it was barred by limitation.

Held, that the income of B. & Co. had not "escaped assessment" within the meaning of S. 34 and that consequently the serving of a notice within the succeeding year was not an essential pre-requisite of a valid assessment of that income and as there was no other time limit prescribed or necessarily implied in the Act, the second assessment was not out of time. Accordingly in a proceeding under that section, the Income tax Officer and after him the Assistant Commissioner are only dealing with the extra income which has not been assessed to income tax. No jurisdiction is given to either of these officers to make a new assessment for the purpose of taxing the whole of that assessment. ——S. 34—Construction and scope—"Escaped assessment"—Meaning of—Burden of proof.

Assessee, who was a money-lender and buying and selling gold and silver, was assessed to income-tax in 1932-1933 under S. 23 (3) of the Income-tax Act, the Income-tax Officer adding to the assessee's income 3 per cent. on the sale of gold and 5 per cent. on the sale of silver, as he was not able to ascertain with accuracy the profits from the sales of gold and silver. In the next year, a different Income-tax Officer came to the conclusion that, as the price of gold had risen very rapidly during the last two months of the previous year of assessment the profits from the sale of gold had been under-estimated, and that the income had therefore escaped assessment. He therefore re-assessed the income under S. 34 of the Act by imposing a higher flat rate on the sale of gold. On appeal, the Assistant Commissioner modified the rate by imposing a rate of 4 per cent. on gold and increasing the rate on silver to 10 per cent.,

Held, that the burden of proving that the income has escaped assessment under S. 34 or that it had been assessed at too low a rate was on the Income-tax authorities; that as it had not been proved that the assessee had in fact received a greater income or that any facts which were before the second Income-tax Officer were not before the first officer—the latter having had the means of knowing the rise in the price of gold—no income had escaped assessment within the meaning of S. 34. S. 34 is not confined to cases in which a source of income has escaped assessment. If it were proved that a certain amount had been received as income from a particular source, while the assessment was only on a lesser amount or if it were proved that the assessment was at a flat rate of say 3 per cent. whilst in fact profits at a higher rate had been made, then income would have escaped assessment within the meaning of S. 34. ——S. 34—Distinction between "chargeability" and "assessability"—No machinery—Assessment—Validity.

There is a clear distinction between chargeability and assessability. The former expression connotes liability to pay income-tax; the latter expression has reference primarily to the machinery, which ought to be utilized, and the procedure that must be followed in determining the amount which should be levied as income-tax. Where therefore no machinery exists to make it possible for the Income-tax authorities to assess the income, profits or gains of the company during that year, the assessment is not legal. The expression "has escaped assessment" in S. 34 cannot be read as equivalent to "has not been assessed" nor can income which has already been duly returned (under S. 22) for assessment be said to have "escaped" assessment within the statutory meaning merely because the assessment on income so returned was not made (under S. 23) within the tax year. Income has not "escaped" assessment within the meaning of S. 34 if there are pending at the time proceedings for the assessment of the assessee's income which have not yet terminated in a final assessment thereof 58 C. 909, Appr. ——S. 34—"Escaped assessment"—Meaning of.

The words "for any reason" placed before the expression "escaped assessment" clearly indicate that the Legislature intended to include all those cases which either resulted from mere inadvertence or from conscious misapprehension of the proper situation. There is no justification for confining the meaning of the word "escape" to those cases only which have not come to the notice of the Income-tax Officer at all and excluding those cases where he has applied his mind, but on account of an error of judgment has set any part of the income free from assessment. The idea conveyed by the words "for any reason" is so wide as to make it impossible not to include any case of non-assessment to whichever cause it may be due. (Addison and Din Mohammad, JJ.) AMIR SINGH SHER SINGH v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, PUNJAB. 158 I.C. 349 = 8 R.L 238 = A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 361.

———S. 34—"Escaped assessment"—Meaning of.

(Per Full Bench, Dalip Singh, J., contra).—The word "escape" has a wide meaning and the words "for any reason" in the beginning of S. 34 appear to widen the interpretation and not to narrow the meaning of the word "escape." Hence if an item of income is included in the return submitted by an assessee during a tax year but is left unassessed by the Income-tax Officer or if assessed in the first instance, the assessment is cancelled by any appellate or revisional authority, it escapes assessment within the meaning of S. 34 and the assessee can be legally served with a notice within one year of the end of that year. 14 Lah. 255, Overr.

Per Dalip Singh, J.—In such a case as stated above, the income cannot be said to have "escaped assessment" The word "escape" is not to be given its widest meaning. The use of the words "for any reason" cannot throw any light on the meaning of the word "escape". The word "assessment" means "the course of assessment." The course of assessment involves both the calculation of the income and the charging of the income. In order to "escape assessment" an income must avoid both calculation and charging. In the case where a deduction has been wrongly allowed, the income has possibly escaped being charged, but has not escaped calculation. It is true that the arithmetical result is the same, but that is not the same thing as holding that the calculation never took place. There is no distinction arising between a mistake of fact and a mistake of law on the part of the Income-tax Officer on the words of the statute. A I.R. 1935 Lah. 361, Diss. from. (*Addison, A. C. ———S. 34—Final assessment—Revision—Permissibility.

The Income-tax Officer has no jurisdiction to revise the assessment for the previous year which has been completed and has become final. A tobacco dealer was assessed under S. 23 (3). His accounts were rejected and taking such materials as were before him into consideration the Income-tax Officer estimated that for the year 1929-30 the assessee made a profit of Rs. 30 a maund on 787 maunds. In the following year another Income-tax Officer in the course of assessment proceedings for the year 1930-31 became dissatisfied with the assessment in respect of the tobacco business which had been made in the previous year as he took the view that the Income-tax Officer had estimated the quantity of tobacco at too high and the profit at too low a figure. Accordingly purporting to proceed under S. 34 he assessed the assessee's income for the year 1928-29 at Rs 60 a maund on 666 maunds.

Held, that the assessment by the Income-tax Officer was not under S. 34, but was an attempt by the Income-tax Officer to go behind and revise the assessment made by the Income-tax Officer in the previous year merely because he disagreed with his predecessor's finding as to the amount of the assessable income and he had no jurisdiction to do so. ———S. 34—"In any year"—Meaning of—Starting point of limitation for notice under S. 34.

The expression "in any year" must be read as meaning the year during which proceedings in assessment in respect of that very year should have been initiated. Where, therefore, the assessment in the year 1928-29 is alleged to have escaped assesment, proceedings under S. 34 can only be opened before the end of the year 1929-1930 and the fact that an original assessment in the year 1928-1929 was set aside by the order of the High Court dated 16th May, 1930, does not have the effect of starting the limitation of one year from that date. So a notice, dated 31st March, 1931, is out of time under S. 34 in respect of the assessment for the year 1928-1929. (*C. C. Ghose, A. C. A notice was issued to the assessee on the 30th April, 1927. The assessee having failed to submit a return in spite of repeated reminders on 13th December, 1927, the Commissioner directed a special Income-tax Officer to deal with the case. In August, 1929, it was held that the said order was not valid. On the 25th September, 1929, the Income-tax Officer who had jurisdiction in the ordinary course issued a remainder and subsequently the assessees filed a return under protest and an assessment was made. Objection having been taken to its validity on the ground that more than one year had elapsed after the date of the original notice, held, that the assessment was valid. The effect of the interim proceedings of the Special Officer having been rendered nugatory was to keep alive the original proceeding and notice which had not proceeded to a final assessment and the Income tax Officer was entitled to make the assessment in pursuance thereof. Even apart from S. 40, there may be other cases in which the trustees in receipt of trust income may be chargeable with tax on such income. By Act IV of 1913, for settling certain properties belonging to Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Baronet, appellants were incorporated as trustees for executing the trusts. By S. 6 the corporation was to pay out of the income from the properties all rates and taxes and sundry other outgoings. By S. 7 the corporation was required to form two funds, called the Sinking Fund, and the Repair Fund, and to carry annually thereto respectively, out of the income of the properties, certain sums calculated on percentages of capital sums there specified. By S. 8 the residue of the income was to be paid to the Baronet for the time being, if of full age, for his own absolute use and benefit.

The mere fact that a person residing outside British India with accumulated wealth chooses to invest part of it in a loan to a person in British India does not constitute a business. And the fact that the borrower chooses to use the money which he has borrowed for the purposes of his own business does not constitute any business connection so far as relates to the lender. The relationship between the parties is that of debtor and creditor and nothing else and that is not such a business connection as is referred to in S. 42. Hence the former cannot be appointed as the agent of the latter within S. 43 for assessment. The debtor company cannot be charged in respect of the creditor's place in Bombay, though it is properly in British India within the meaning of S, 42. ——S. 42—Hindu joint family—Several places of residence.

The question as to what is the residence of a joint family cannot depend upon the nature of income it gets, It cannot be that the test of residence should be one thing if it is a trading family, and the test of residence some other thing if it gets income from securities, property or other sources. In the case of a Hindu joint family, the family should be said to reside in all those places where members of the family live and may, like a company or firm, have more than one place of residence. Therefore the test in A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 732 cannot apply to what are generally described in decisions as Hindu Law partnerships, i.e., partnerships which are the creatures of Hindu Law and not of the law of contracts. A single monetary transaction by a non-resident with a resident in British India cannot be described as a "business connection" within the meaning of S. 42 (1) Where, therefore, a non-resident advances a loan to a company in British India taking security therefor, the interest earned by the non-resident on the loan, cannot be deemed to have accrued to him through or from any business connection in British India. That the company used the borrowed money in connection with their own business is not a fact which brings the non-resident any nearer to being a person who has a business connection in British India. The circumstance that the repayments of the loan are contemplated to extend over a period of five years, and that the interest would be payable from time to time during this period, is equally ineffective to bring the case within S. 42 (1). An application for refund under S. 48 of the Income-tax Act must be made within the time limited by S. 50 and on no consideration can an application made beyond that time be entertained. Though the assessment has been made only after the expiry of that period, that is no justification for, presenting the application beyond time. It is quite true that it is impossible for the assessee to ascertain whether he is or is not entitled to a refund under S. 48 (1) until after an assessment is made, and that it works a hardship in making it incumbent on him to present his application for refund within the time limited by S. 50, when the assessment itself is not made until after the expiry of that period. ——S. 60—Co operative Society—Government of India Notification dated 12th August, 1925—Object of —Co operative Society—Interest on securities and income from property, if "profits."

The intention of the Government underlying its notification, dated 12th August, 1925, was to exempt from income-tax the profits accruing to Co-operative Societies from carrying on the business of a Mutual Co-operative Society upon the ground that "a man cannot make a loss or profits out of himself" and in that way to encourage and foster Co-operative Societies which were designed to improve the conditions of Indian cultivators. But neither interest from securities nor income derived from property are "profits" within the meaning of the term as used in the notification, unless the investment of capital in property or securities is part of the business of the co-operative Society. In considering that question, the fact that such income appears as part of the profits in the profit and loss account of the assessee is not conclusive. Under S. 60, the Government of India can, by notification, deal with income-tax and super-tax but it does not follow that it cannot exempt, reduce in rate or otherwise modify income-tax alone or super-tax alone. The Government of India Notification, Finance Department (Central Revenue) No. 21, dated 12th October, 1929, exempts the assessee from the payment of income-tax in respect of such part of the profits of a firm which has discontinued its business if tax had at any time been charged on such business under the Income-tax Act (VII of 1918) or if an assessment has been made on the firm in respect of such profits under S. 25 (1) of the Income-tax Act (XI of 1922). The officer refused to accept this return, and to test its accuracy called, under S. 23 (2), for evidence in its support. In response the assessee's business books were produced. In stating a case to the Hight Court, the Commissioner should not frame the questions in general terms. Also he should state only such questions as are intended to be answered by the High Court. In such cases if the Commissioner thinks that there is a point of law proper to be referred, he is not bound to refuse merely because the assessee has not framed it properly. It is also open to the Income-tax Officer to hold that a certain agreement filed by the assessees had not been proved to be a genuine transaction and therefore he does not violate any rule of law in rejecting it. Where the assessee asks the Commissioner of the Income-tax to refer certain points of law to the High Court it is correct and proper that the Commissioner should write a judgment, so to say, giving his reasons for his conclusion. But if part of the conclusion to which he comes is that it is right to refer a certain question to the High Court, then he ought in strictness to make out another document, namely, a statement of the case upon that point for the opinion of the High Court. The order that he makes will no doubt give reasons why he will state a case on certain questions and refuses to state a case on other questions. But when he comes to state a case he has got past that stage, and is only concerned with the questions which he intends to refer to the High Court and the facts bearing thereon. The two things might with great advantage be separate documents (*Rankin, C.J., C. C. ———S. 66 (3)—Question of fact—Capital or profits—Foreign remittance.

In every case when the question is whether a particular sum is "profits" or 'capital", the question is a question of fact to be determined upon the materials before the Income-tax authorities If therefore an assessee's foreign business remits money to him in a country in which his profits from his business in that country are assessed to income-tax, the question whether the remittance is a remittance from out of the profits of the foreign business or out of capital is a question of fact to be determined upon the material before the income tax authorities. In such circumstances the only question of law that can arise is whether there was material before the income-tax authorities upon which they could find that a particular sum was profits or income earned by the assessees and remitted during the year of assessment. INCOME TAX BECHUANALAND PROTECTORATE PROCLAMATION (1922), S. 15—Repairs or capital charge—Railway company—Renewal of rails and sleepers.

The periodical renewal by sections of the rails and sleepers of a railway line as they wear out by use is in no sense a reconstruction of the whole railway and is an ordinary incident of railway admistration. The fact that the wear although continuous is not and cannot be made good annually does not render the work of renewal when it comes to be effected necessarily a capital charge. Where the expenditure is incurred in consequence of the rails having been worn out in earning the income of previous years on which tax had been paid without deduction in respect of such wear and represents the costs of restoring them to a state in which they could continue to earn income, it does not result in the creation of any new asset; it is incurred to maintain the existing line in a state to earn revenue. In such a case the renewals effected constitute no improvement; but they merely make good the line so as to restore it to its original state and are "repairs" within the meaning of S. 15 (1) (b). INDIAN (NON-DOMICILED PARTIES) DIVORCE RULES (1927), R. 9—Scope—Suit for dissolution by wife—Allegation of adultery—Right of alleged adulteress to intervene—Procedure.

Under the provisions of R. 9 of the Indian (Non-Domiciled) Divorce Rules, made under S. 1 (4) of the Indian and Colonial Divorce (Jurisdiction) Act, 1926, an alleged adulteress, against whom allegations of adultery are made in a suit for dissolution of marriage against a husband by his wife, is entitled to intervene on applying to the Court within the time specified in a notice served upon her. Such application for leave to intervene has to be made by summons supported by an affidavit, but returnable before the Judge in Chambers ; and when the order is made giving leave, it should contain or be accompanied with such directions as to appearance and procedure as the Court might think fit. ———R. 12 (2)—Petition for dissolution of marriage —Allegation of adultery—Adulterer as party—Procedure.

In a wife's petition for dissolution of marriage the respondent filed an answer wherein he made charges of adultery with a certain person and there was also a prayer that the person should be impleaded as party and the cause title be amended. The alleged adulterer was served with a notice calling upon him to appear in the suit within a specified time and informing him that he was entitled within the said time to apply for leave to intervene in the cause. The latter entered appearance in pursuance of the notice but the same was objected to

Held, (1) that the notice in the form it was issued to the alleged adulterer was entirely out of order and that the proper procedure was to serve a copy of the answer on him, permit him to appear and have the cause title amended. In such a case, he, in the position of a co-respondent whether so described or not, should file an answer within 15 days.

Held, further, that the irregularity in the form of notice was not material in view of the fact that appearance had already been entered. By R. 24, the Rules made under the Indian Divorce Act are made applicable to proceedings under the Act of 1926 Where in a wife's petition for dissolution of marriage, the respondent pleads adultery and the alleged adulterer applies to be impleaded as party, the proper procedure is to apply to the Court by a notice of motion. Any matrimonial offence committed subsequent to the condonation of a prior matrimonial offence, such as adultery, will operate to revive the prior offence so as to enable the aggrieved party to rely upon it as a ground for seeking divorce or dissolution of marriage. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction as prayed for.

The mere fact that the plaintiff possesses a prescriptive right to light and air on the property of the defendant is not by itself sufficient to justify the grant of an injunction for demolition of a wall or against closing a window. Where the loss of light and air is substantial, the plaintiff has suffered a legal wrong and pecuniary compensation cannot afford adequate relief, the Court may issue a mandatory injunction to the defendant directing her to so construct her building as to leave forty-five degrees of unobstructed light to enter into the window of the room on the first floor of the plaintiff's house. ———Minor—Injunction against—Major defendant acting as guardian of minor defendant and giving up his defence — Injunction against minor defendant also.

In an action to restrain several defendants from causing obstruction to the proposed construction of a building by the plaintiff, defendant No. 1 acted as guardian of the minor. The acts and misdeeds complained against were alleged to have been done by defendant No. 1 and by original defendant No. 2, the father of the minor and there was no evidence that the minor did any act or that the acts committed by original defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were done at the instance of the minor or on his behalf The defendant No. 1 filed a written statement on behalf of the minor son of defendant No. 2 raising the same contentions as he himself raised but he subsequently gave up his defence. The lower Court thereon granted an injunction against all the defendants including the minor.

Held, an injunction was a remedy against an individual and should be issued only in respect of acts done by him against whom it is sought to be enforced. ———Annulment of adjudication—Order of—When to be made—Old insolvency—Principles.

In cases of old insolvencies, the Court should be very slow in making orders of annulment. An order of annulment is intended to be a penalty imposed upon a debtor who fails to obtain his discharge, the theory being that it will deprive him of the benefit of the Insolvency law and render him liable to be proceeded against by his creditors; but in a case where the insolvency has gone on for a long time, to the extent of about 15 years, an order annulling the insolvency really confers a privilege upon the debtor, and does not impose a penalty on him. The creditors are not likely to arrest him, and unless an order is made for vesting the property, he may get the property returned to him. INSOLVENCY.

After the annulment of an adjudication, the officer of the Court in whose hands the assets are vested for the benefit of the creditors has the right and indeed the duty, to bring to the attention of the Court, facts which go to show that persons appearing in the list of creditors are not in fact creditors. This is not invalidating the act of the Official Receiver in admitting debt. It is part and parcel of the necessary steps that must be taken for the proper administration of the assets with which he is charged. He has this power as any other Receiver would have it, and quite apart from any express statutory provision. In a partnership suit, it was found that the partnership which was between three partners had been dissolved and that a large sum of money was due to one of the partners. After the suit had been instituted two of the partners were adjudicated insolvent and by an arrangement between the solvent partner and the Official Assignee of the estate of the two insolvent partners, one-third of the assets of the partnership which had been realised was handed over to the representatives of the solvent partner who meanwhile had died. The representatives of the solvent partner obtained a final decree in the partnership suit and tendered a proof in the insolvency for the amount outstanding under the decree. An application was filed by one of the creditors in the insolvency for the purpose of obtaining an order expunging the proof of the debt by the representatives of the solvent partner upon the ground that, inasmuch as the assets distributable in the insolvency were part of the partnership assets and the solvent partner was liable as a partner to liquidate the debts of the partnership, the debt of his representatives was a debt owing by two partners who were insolvent to a third partner, and as such was postponed until after the debts of the outside creditors of the partnership had been satisfied. The learned Judge in insolvency dismissed the application on appeal.

Held, that the proof of the representatives of the solvent partner ought to be expunged. (Page, C.J. and Mya Bu, J.) A. K. R. M. M. C. T. CHETTYAR FIRM v. S.P. DAYABHOY & SONS. 12 Rang. 699=156 I.C. 336 =7 R.R. 402=A.I R. 1935 Rang. 59.

A debtor was adjudicated as an insolvent at Penang, a part of the Straits Settlements, on the 9th January, 1931. On the 15th March, 1931, the appellant, a resident of Ramnad in British India, filed a suit against the insolvent in the Sub Court of Ramnad and obtained an attachment before judgment of his immovable property on the 24th July, 1931, and a decree on the 28th November, 1931. On the 19th July, 1932, he attached in execution the insolvent's immovable property in Ramnad. On the 24th October, 1932, the insolvent executed a conveyance in Penang of his property in British India including the property under attachment in favour of the Official Assignee in Bankruptcy of Penang. On the 5th December, 1932, at the request of the Supreme Court of Penang an order was made by the High Court for the Official Assignee of Madras to act as auxiliary to the Official Assignee of Penang and take possession and realise the properties of the bankrupt. The Official Assignee of Madras having heard of the proceedings in execution taken by the appellant applied to the Insolvency Court for an order under S. 18 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act staying the appellant's execution proceedings.

Held, that the insolvents' immovable property in British India did not vest in the Official Assignee of Penang on the adjudication. The Straits Settlements Bankruptcy Ordinance would be ultra vires if it purported to cause such a vesting of extra-territorial immovable property. Macleod v. Attorney General for New South Wales, (1891) A. The heirs of X, one of the partners of a firm, obtained a decree against the co-partners. The Official Assignee deposited the amount in the executing Court, which was paid out to Z, on his executing a security bond for the refund of the money in case it should be found that he was not entitled to it after the legal representatives of X had been brought on the record. Subsequently, on an application by one of the creditors in the insolvency, the High Court, on appeal, expressed the opinion that payment of the debt for which X's heirs tendered a proof must be postponed until after the debts of the outside creditors have been liquidated. On a question being raised as to the power of the Insolvency Judge to direct Z to repay the money drawn by him from Court to the Official Assignee or to proceed against the security furnished by him.

Held, (i) that the payment of the dividend, which the Official Assignee deposited in Court in the regular suit upon the footing that it was a dividend payable to X's heirs, ought not to have been made, as the debt due to them could not be paid part passu with the debt of the outside creditors of the firm; (ii) that the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to direct Z to refund the amount to the Official Assignee or to proceed against the property deposited by him as security in the regular suit, as Z did not receive payment of the money in any sense as a creditor in the insolvency but as a judgment-creditor in liquidation of his decree against X inter alias in the regular suit and as the security was furnished not for the benefit of the insolvent estate but for the benefit of the heirs of X. An unsecured creditor opposed this application contending that G was entitled to nothing and the Insolvency Judge upheld the contention. The District Judge, on appeal, held that as no appeal was preferre ' against the order of 26th February, 1932, G was entitled to retain Rs. 500. On second appeal, Held, that G having made an application in connexion with the order of 26th February, 1932, the whole matter was re-agitated before the Insolvency Judge and hence it became unnecessary for the unsecured creditor to prefer an appeal to District Judge. The Insolvency Judge, who passed the order dated 26th February, 1932 had been transferred and no application for review was competent. The application of G could only be considered to have been made under the provisions of S. 151 and the Insolvency Judge had ample power in the exercise of his inherent jurisdiction to pass such order as was required by justice and the necessities of the case, and was thus competent to set aside the previous order dated 26th February, 1932. The insolvent was adjudicated in Calcutta but subsequently the adjudication was annulled and a scheme of composition approved. It appeared that the insolvent had certain properties in Bikanir, which however was charged to the full in favour of creditors. The latter properties were not included in the composition. An unsecured creditor having sued to recover the debt contracted by the insolvent at Calcutta, the insolvent applied for an injunction restraining the creditor from proceeding with the suit.

INSOLVENCY.

Held, that though the Court under the circumstances of the case can make an injunction order effective, it was not necessary to pass such an order having regard to the merits of the matter. The rights as between the Official Assignee and the claimant are entirely distinct from those between a debtor and a creditor, for the Official Assignee like the trustee in bankruptcy represents the general body of creditors and is entitled to go behind the covenant in a mortgage or a stated account and to require satisfactory evidence admitting proof that the claim represents a genuine debt." On the 7th November, 1928, a proposal form was filled in and signed by the plaintiff. He also paid a sum of Rs. 95 being the amount of premium. The insurance was to be in force for one year and the sum of Rs. 95 was the entire premium for that year. On 22nd November, 1928, the plaintiff received a document described a "cover note" which ran as follows: "Plaintiff having made a proposal for insurance of burglary, etc., and having paid the sum of Rs. 95, being the amount of premium thereon, the risk is hereby held insured subject to the terms and conditions of the Company's usual form of policy, for a period of 30 days from date within which period (provided the premium is paid) the policy will be issued."

Held, that there was a clear acceptance of the proposal on behalf of the Insurance Company. The fact that the policy did not arrive before the burglary took place could not be relied on by the Insurance Company as the acceptance of the proposal was complete and had been communicated to the plaintiff. ———Contract of—Conclusion—Formalities—Stipulation as to payment of premium—Effect of—Waiver.

A contract of insurance, like any other contract, is completed by an offer and acceptance, and a pre payment of the premium is not in law a condition precedent to the contract. But it is almost a common practice for all insurers, except marine, to stipulate that the contract shall not begin to take effect until the premium has been paid, and the Court will not enforce a contract of insurance when there is such a stipulation in the policy, until the premium has been paid. But it is competent for the insurer to waive the condition and the Court will readily infer such a waiver which may be established either by evidence of an express agreement or may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances of the case. Even when there is a stipulation or a condition as to the payment of premium, if the assured undertakes to pay the premium or promises to pay it, the contract between the parties becomes a completed or concluded contract. The policy of insurance contained a clause that "the company should not be liable for any loss or damage after the expiration of twelve months from the happening of the loss or damage, unless the claim was the subject of pending action or arbitration". Where the suit was filed more than twelve months after the fire, and there had been no reference to arbitration and all the time had been spent in the investigation of the claim and delay by the insured.

Held, that (i) the words "pending action" referred only to a pending suit and not to steps which the company might take in the investigation of the claim; (ii) that the clause only provided that the company shall not be liable if the claim was made more than twelve months from the date of the loss and not that the insured should not have the right to sue after 12 months, so it was not against public policy and it did not contravene the provisions of S. 28 of the Contract Act or Art. 86 of the Limitation Act. Sometime after, the plaintiff paid a sum of money to one C, a person purporting to act as canvassing agent of the company for effecting new insurance. C gave him a receipt for the amount paid. The receipt however was referable not to a renewal of the policy but to a proposal for a new policy intended to be issued. The new policy was, however, never issued. receipt issued by the canvassing agent and a renewal receipt purporting to have been issued by the underwriters. The latter was, however, found to be a forgery.

Held, that the company was not liable. The provisional receipt did not purport to effect a new policy or the renewal of the old policy. Neither the canvassing agent nor the underwriter on whose behalf he professed to act had the authority to effect a renewal of the policy under the terms of his agency and in so far as the canvassing agent purported to do so, he was not acting within the scope of his employment. The liability of the insurer could only commence from the issue of the policy which in fact was never done. The fraudulent act of the canvassing agent could not bind the company. ———Fire insurance—Material misdescription of property—Meaning of.

In the case of a policy of fire insurance, a material misdescription of property means a misdescription such as would affect the mind of a reasonable insurer either as to accepting the risk or as to the premium which he would place upon the risk. Whether a misdescription is material or is not, is partly a question of evidence and also partly a question of law. Where a building consisting of a back wall built of brick, front wall of timber and the side walls partly of brick and partly of timber, is described in the policy as "constructed of brick walls and cement flooring in the ground storey" the description is inaccurate in a matter which is material for insurance purposes. In a policy of insurance one of the conditions was that in case of material misdescription of the property insured, the company would not be liable on the policy. Certain walls in the building insured which were built of timber were described as being built of bricks.

Held, that as wooden buildings were highly combustible during certain periods of year and the acceptance of the policy or fixing up of the premium depended on the nature of the building, the above was a material misdescription and that the company was under no liability to the assured under the policy.

Held, further, that it was immaterial whether the agents knew about the misdescription and that the company was not liable in any case. (Page, C. J. and Mya Bu, J.) VULCAN INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. DAWSONS BANK, LTD. 11 Rang 266=6 I R (Rang.) 127=146 I.C 860=A I R. 1933 Rang. 166

Held, that on a construction of the policy, it had reference only to a risk in the future and not to the past, that the renewal assumed that the subject-matter of the insurance continued to exist and as it had failed to exist at the time of the acceptance by the defendants, the assured was not entitled to recover. On the lapse of a life insurance policy for non-payment of premium even after the days of grace, the assured in accordance with the rule of the insurance company sent a declaration in the prescribed form and also a payment, which were accepted, and the policy was revived. The rule in question provided for revival of the policy "on furnishing satisfactory evidence of continued good health", etc. Six months later, the assured died of acute dyspepsia the doctor's certificate showed that the assured was suffering from the disease from about four months after the revival of the policy till death, and that he had a slight attack two months before the lapse, but that he got over it by treatment for over a month. The company pleaded that the revival was invalid because of misstatement on a material particular in the declaration.

In a particular year a policy holder paid three instalments amounting to Rs. 113-1 0 but committed default as regards the fourth instalment which amounted to Rs. 37 11-0. It appeared that the surrender value of the policy on the date of default was Rs. 86 3 0. The question having been raised whether the policy was forfeited on account of the default of the policy holder, Held, that the surrender value was sufficient to pay the year's premium and the policy was not forfeited. The only definition of cause of action that will work if it has to be applied to cases of all kinds is the entire set of facts that gives rise to an enforceable claim. The appellant claimed compensation for injuries sustained in a collision with a motor-car driven by J, the daughter of Berry, who had insured with the respondents. Under S. 24 of the British Columbia Insurance Act, "where a person incurs liability for injury or damage and is insured against such liability, the person entitled to the damages may recover by action against the insurer. It was contended for the appellant that by virtue of the last clause in the policy extending the indemnity "to any person while riding in or operating the automobile with the permission of the insured," J was "insured" within the meaning of S. 24 of the Act and hence the respondents were liable to compensate the appellant.

Held, (i) that no one could claim the benefit of the policy even if answering the general description, unless it was established that the person who directed the insurance to be affected actually intended to cover that particular person or at least some one who should answer the description. There was no evidence of any such intention and the mere generality of the language was not in itself sufficient; (ii) that though a party to a contract can constitute himself a trustee for a third party of a right under the contract and thus confer such rights enforceable in equity on the third party, there again the intention to constitute the trust must be affirmatively proved: it cannot necessarily be inferred from the mere general words of the policy; (iii) that Berry had no insurable interest in J's (his daughter's) personal liability and so the policy, in respect of such a risk, was void under the statute; (iv) that in short, S 24 was satisfied only by a contract at law, enforceable directly against the insurers by the insured in his own

It was subject to six months notice of withdrawal which was given at the time of deposit. The receipt given by the bank stated that the deposit was repayable on the expiration of six months, after which date it would cease to carry interest unless the receipt was endorsed by the depositor and presented again. Before the expiry of the term, the members of the firm fell out with each other and one of them gave a notice to bank not to pay the amount without his concurrence. At the end of the period, the bank sent a notice, desiring to know if the deposit was going to be withdrawn or renewed but received no reply. Six months later, the manager applied for renewal which the bank refused to do without the consent of the other member of the joint family. In a suit by the manager for recovery of the deposit with interest, Held, that there was no stipulation for interest after the due date, no wrongful or unjust retention of the money and no fraud on the part of the bank; the bank was always ready to return the money to the firm and was prevented from doing so by the manager himself; the taking of a loan did not necessarily imply a promise to pay interest and that there was no rule of law or equity by which the bank was liable to pay interest. In April, 1924, K and R jointly purchased certain property for Rs. 2,700. The property was subject to a mortgage in favour of B for Rs. 1,800. It was arranged that R should pay half the sale consideration payable by him, namely, Rs. 450 to the vendor and Rs. 900 to the mortgagee K, the other purchaser, was to pay Rs. 450 cash to the vendor and retain Rs. 900 with him for his share of the mortgage money. Subsequently some pre-emption suits were instituted in respect of the sale-deed and the plaintiffs ultimately obtained a decree for pre-emption in February, 1927.

It is very difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule as regards a proper rate of interest for mortgage transactions. So far as interest up to the date of suit or up to the date fixed for repayment of the mortgage-money is concerned, unless circumstances are made out which would bring the case within S. 74 of the Contract Act or give rise to considerations arising under Usurious Loans Act of 1918, the Court would be bound to grant interest at the rate stipulated for in the contract. As regards the interest for the period subsequent to the date fixed for repayment (by the decree) the Court would ordinarily make a decree for interest, though not at the stipulated rate but at such rate as the Court may consider fair and proper, and ordinarily such interest should be allowed at the Court rate, viz., six per cent. per annum. But it does not mean that the mortgagee is entitled at all events to some interest after the date fixed for repayment. On the other hand, there may be circumstances justifying the Court in refusing interest absolutely after that date, e.g., where the decree provided that interest at contract rate should be paid until the expiration of three months therefrom or date of realization, whichever was earlier and in default, the amount should be realized by sale of the mortgaged properties and it was only the mortgagee who, in spite of the default, preferred an appeal which remained pending for two years. The stipulated rate of interest can be awarded up to the date of realisation or actual payment and a debtor should not be allowed to keep the money of his creditor at a low rate of interest by merely bringing an unsuccessful appeal. Where the defendant was ordered to make payment within certain time and on his failure to do so, interest was to be calculated from that date at 6 per cent. and the charged property was to be sold, and the defendant did not pay but appealed and the appeal was dismissed, but on his request, time was extended for payment and interest was ordered to be paid according to the contract rate for the period extended.

Held, that the order as to interest was proper as otherwise, a debtor has only to prefer an appeal in order to withhold the payment of money to his creditor for a long period without incurring liability for interest at the rate which he himself had agreed to pay and which he could not challenge on any valid ground. In the case of ordinary money claims not based on mortgage, a tender before suit of the amount due must be followed by payment into Court when the creditor sues for the money in order to stop the running of interest. (38 Mad. 959; 16 Bom. 141; 34 Cal. 305, Rel.) In the case of mortgages, the rule is different and a tender alone has the effect, under S. 84, T. P. One important principle, under which running of interest may be suspended is where the delay in the payment of the principal debt is caused by some improper act or omission of the creditor. With regard to crimes as defined by international law, that law has no means of trying or punishing them. But whereas according to international law the criminal jurisdiction of Municipal law is ordinarily restricted to crimes committed on its terra firma or territorial waters or its own ships, and to crime by its own nationals wherever committed, it is also recognized as extending to piracy committed on the high seas by any national on any ship, because a person guilty of such piracy has placed himself beyond the protection of any State. ———Domicile—Meaning.

Domicile connotes the place in which a man has voluntarily fixed the habitation of himself and his family, not for a special or temporary purpose, but with the intention of making a permanent home until some unexpected event shall occur to induce him to adopt some other permanent home. Every person at birth acquires a domicile of origin. A person may change his domicile by choice. The domicile of origin is retained until one of choice is acquired by a combination of residence and intention. Two things are in fact essential to constitute a domicile of choice in a new country, viz., residence in that country without any animus revertendi to the country of origin and the intention of making a permanent home in a new country. Domicile of choice is, in fact, a mixed question of intention and act. (Dunkley, J.) EMPEROR v. MAN MOHAN. 6 I.R. ———Domicile—Presumption—Burden of proof.

Domicile is of two kinds, domicile of origin and domicile of choice. The domicile of origin is irrevocably ascertained at the party's nativity. A domicile of choice he can indeed acquire, but the domicile of origin remains in abeyance and is at any moment ready to revive. Every presumption is to be made in favour of the original domicile. It is for the party who relies on a change of domicile to prove that such a change has taken place. To do this he must demonstrate a double intention, the intention of the abandoning his domicile of origin and the intention of adopting the domicile of choice. A domicile of choice is not established by mere assertion. The pertitioner left his native land under orders and not of his own freewill. He came to India in obedience to other authority, and not in the exercise of any choice of his own. Being thus transplanted he did not strike root. The petitioner, moreover, was neither a house holder, nor any member of any club in India nor was he permanently employed.

Held, that the petitioner was not domiciled in India. (Ferrers, J.C.) HALL v. HALL. I.R. 1933 Sind 132=143 I.C. 618=A.I.R. 1933 Sind 70.

The forms necessary to constitute a valid marriage and the construction of the marriage contract depend on the lex loci contractus, that is, the law of the place where the marriage ceremony is performed; (2) on marriage, the wife automatically acquires the domicile of her husband; (3) the status of spouses and their rights and obligations arising under the marriage contract are governed by the lex domicilii, that is, by the law of the country in which for the time being they are domiciled. 8 A. C. 43 and (1930) P. 217; (4) the rights and obligations of the parties relating to the dissolution of the marriage do not form part of the marriage contract, but arise out of, and are incidental to, such contract and are governed by the lex domicilii. In 1906, Jessie, a Christian lady domiciled in Scotland, married Gulam, a Muhammadan, domiciled in British India, by civil marriage in Scotland. The parties then settled in British India, in 1912; she adopted the Muhammadan faith. In 1922 Gulam divorced his wife by talak. Shortly after, Jessie obtained a declaration from the District Court that the was no longer married to Gulam. In 1923 she married Mancherji, a Parsi convert to Christianity (respondent). In 1933, she filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage with the respondent on the ground of adultery and cruelty. The respondent contended that the petitioner's marriage with Gulam had not been validly dissolved and was still subsisting and that his marriage with the petitioner was void.

Held, that (i) the declaration obtained by the petitioner from the District Court did not operate as a judgment in rem and was not binding on the respondent; (ii) the status attaching to the marriage and the rights flowing therefrom are determined by lex domicilii, not lex loci contractus and divorce by talak being recognised by the Muhammadan Law of British India, Jessie was validly divorced. ———Act conferring power—Jurisdiction—Exercise of—Principles.

Where an Act gives a special power, that power must be limited to the purpose for which it is conferred and jurisdiction must be exercised strictly in accordance with the provisions of the statute which creates it. It is not only undesirable but unsafe for the Court to vary the words of a statute, in an endeavour to meet a particular situation, for the purpose of giving effect to what may presumably have been the intention of the legislature. ———Duty of Court—No duty to supply deficiency—Competing constructions.

If on the true construction of a statute, not excluding a taxing statute, a lacuna or defect appears, it is no part of the duty of the Court to supply the deficiency; but in choosing between two competing constructions, each of them possible, it is not irrelevant to consider that one of them is consistent with the obvious purpose of the Act, while the other would render the statute capricious or abortive. An Indian Act should not ordinarily be construed in the light of statutes enacted by another legislature. Thus by virtue of the reference to the English Court of Matrimonial Causes in S. 7 of the Divorce Act, the Courts in India can be taken to have in relation to a wife who had obtained a decree for judicial separation, the power which the Court in England undoubtedly enjoyed, of increasing the amount of her permanent alimony as and when the circumstances justified an increase. It is an incontestable principle that fiscal Acts must be interpreted for the benefit of the subject rather than the State. If the special Act is made after the general Act, the position is even simpler. It conferred on the City the power to macadamise the streets, the cost of it to come out of the general fund of the City. General and specific words.

———General and specific words—Intention of the legislature as the test.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Government statement.

Ordinarily a general word receives its natural meaning but a general word which follows particular and specific words of the same nature as itself may take its meaning from them and may be taken to be restricted to the same genus as those words. This rule of construction however is used only for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature. If it can be seen from a wider inspection of the scope of the legislation that the general words, notwithstanding that they follow particular words, are nevertheless to be construed generally, effect must be given to the intention of the legislature as gathered from the larger survey. General principle.

———General principle.

In interpreting a statute the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute itself and ask what its natural meaning is. Except where the terms used in the statute have acquired a technical sense, ordinary meaning should be attached to the word or words used and the intention of a statute has to be gathered from the words used and not from any speculation about its object. Regard has to be paid to three important factors : (1) A statute enacts everything essential to its existence. (2) Remedial measures must be liberally construed so as to advance the remedy. (3) Where the words are ambiguous and two meanings are possible, the scope and object of the enactment may be looked at for the elucidation of the meaning. Harmonious construction.

———Harmonious construction.

Per Shingne, J.—"One of the principles of construction of a statute is that it must be construed strictly, and that Courts of Law must generally take it absolutely for granted that the legislature has said what it meant and meant what it has said. But undue strictness in construing a provision in a statute may sometimes sacrifice the true intention of the legislature and the rational development of the law to the tyranny of words. The true principle of construing a statute is that we ought to give to an Act of the legislature, the plain, fair, literal meaning of its words, where we do not see from its scope that such meaning would be inconsistent or would lead to manifold injustice and that the true meaning of any provision in an Act will have to be gathered by comparing it with the other parts of the same Act and that every clause of the Act should be construed with reference to the context, so far as possible, so as to make a consistent enactment of the whole Act relating to the subject matter. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Harmonious construction.

It is incumbent upon the Court to see that the provisions of one Act which are apparently inconsistent with the provisions of another Act passed by the same legislature should, as far as possible, be reconciled by reading one as a qualification of the other and that if that be not possible, the provisions of the latter Act should prevail as it speaks the last intentions of the makers. Ibbs v. Boulnois, (1875) 10 Ch. 479; Reg v. The Overseers of the Parish of Tonbridge, (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 339; The Wardens and Governors of Cholmeley School, Highgate v Sewell, (1894) 2 Q.B D 906; Imray v. Oakshette, (1897) 2 Q.B. 218; In re Cummings, Ltd and the County Council of Middlesex, (1907) 1 K. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Income-tax Act.

In order to interpret the provisions of an Act, when the sections themselves are clear, the Court cannot allow its mind to be influenced by the previous history of the law and draw any inferences as regards the supposed policy of the legislature. It is only in cases of ambiguity, that previous legislation may be referred to in order to throw light upon the interpretation of a particular section But where the Act itself is clear, the presumption is that the legislature deliberately intended to alter the law and the Court must interpret the sections as they stand. For the purposes of construing the words "religious or charitable purposes" in the Income tax Act, it is quite unnecessary to investigate the meanings of the words in the particular system of jurisprudence that may be followed by the assessee. It is proper to construe the term with reference to the English law on the point, especially as the draft was made in the English language and by persons presumably acquainted with the English law on the point. In interpreting a statute which, like a taxing statute, is meant to apply to all persons irrespective of their personal law, the canon of construction must be either to take the plain grammatical meaning of the words used or to take the legal construction from the jurisprudence of the country in which the statute was drafted and apply it as far as possible to make the effect of the statute equal whether in a sister country or to sister communities following a different system of jurisprudence. 1891 A.C. 531, Rel. on. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Intention of legislature.

Intention of legislature.

———Intention of legislature—Alteration of law.

It must always be presumed that the legislature does not intend to make any alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares either in express terms or by necessary implication or in other words beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute. ———Intention of legislature—Convenience, reason, justice and legal principles.

Per Bench.—The Courts are no doubt bound to give effect to the plain language of a statute, but in determining the meaning of the language used by the legislature in any particular passage, that intention must be presumed to be the true one which appears to be most in accord with the convenience, reason, justice and legal principles. ———Intention of legislature—Enquiry into—Duty of Court.

Per Bhide, J., in the order of reference: "When the words of a statute admit of but one meaning, the Court is not at liberty to speculate on the intention of the legislature, and to construe them according to its own notions of what ought to have been enacted. Nothing could be more dangerous than to make such considerations, the ground for construing an enactment that is unambiguous in itself. To depart from the meaning on account of such views is, in truth, not to construe the Act, but to alter it. But the business of the interpreter is not to improve the statute, it is to expound it. The question for him is not, what the legislature meant, but what its language means, i.e., what the Act has said that it meant. (Maxwell, 6th Ed., p. 10)." (Tek Chand and Monroe, JJ.) MT. ———Intention of legislatare—Enquiry into—Duty of Court.

It is one of the elementary rules of construction that the intention of the legislature is to be gathered from the words used by it, and where the wording is plain and unambiguous and admits of but one meaning only, the Courts must give effect to it. In such cases, it is beyond the province of the Judge to speculate as to what the "real intention" of the framers of the statute was. ———Intention of legislature—Guide to.

The language used is the best declaration of the intention of the legislature and is conclusive of it. King's prerogative.

———King's prerogative—Restriction of, by Colonial Act.

The King's prerogative cannot be restricted or qualified save by express words or by necessary intendment. In connection with Dominion or Colonial matters, that principle involves that if the limitation of the prerogative is by a Dominion or Colonial Act, not only must that Act itself deal with the prerogative either by express terms, or by necessary intendment, but it must be the Act of a Dominion or Colonial Legislature which has been endowed with the requisite power by an Imperial Act likewise giving the power either by express terms or by neceessary intendment. In giving effect to a statute of limitation, if two articles limiting the period for bringing a suit are wide enough to include the same cause of action, and neither of them can be said to apply more specifically than the other, that which keeps alive rather than that which bars the right to sue should, generally, and apart from other equitable considerations, be preferred. ———Limitation Act—Amendment of—Barred remedy —Effect on.

The law of limitation affects only the form of remedy and belongs to the domain of adjective law. As a consequence, the limitation enactment applicable to a case is the one actually in operation on the date of its institution, even though the enactment may have to be enforced retrospectively. The provisions of limitation as such do not create or take away any rights ; they are negative in character, they only interpose a bar of time for enforcing existing rights. Unless the new statute expressly says so, if a remedy is already barred under the existing law, it will not be revived by the amending or repealing Act. (Case-law referred to.) ———Limitation Act—Construction.

Statutes of limitation are to be construed strictly and the defence of lapse of time against a just demand is not to be extended to cases which are not clearly within the enactment, while provisions which give exceptions to the operation of such enactments are to be construed liberally. In cases of doubt, such provisions are to be construed in the manner most favourable to the person whose right is the subject of limitation. (Wild, J.C.

Bajpai, J.—The law of limitation is a law of procedure and the general rule is that a statute of limitation is retrospective in its operation and governs all proceedings from the moment of its enactment, even though the cause of action might accrue before the Act come into force. 35 All. 227, Ref. The law of limitation is not always a purely adjective law, inasmuch as in certain cases it provides for the creation of rights by prescription, and the corresponding extinction of rights (S.28, Lim. Act of 1908) and if those rights have vested in individuals under one law of limitation, they cannot be divested by the introduction of a new law of limitation or by an amendment in the law. It is only when the retrospective application of a statute of limitation would destroy vested rights, that it is not to be construed retrospectively otherwise the ordinary rule is that rules of limitation are rules of procedure and no one has a vested right in any period of limitation. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES — Mandatory or directory.

It is an elementary principle of the construction of statutes that the words have to be read in their literal sense. Mandatory or directory.

———Mandatory or directory—Act of public utility—Words "it shall be lawful".

In construing Acts of public utility where the framing of the rules and the making of the appointment is necessary in order that the objects of the Act may be attained, such words which might otherwise be considered permissive are really mandatory. The permissive form is a mere courteous convention. The Act really imposes a duty on the executive, and it is implied that a public body will carry out the duties indicated by the legislature, in order that the purpose of the legislature may not be frustrated. But the case is otherwise when a public body or officer is invested with authority to exercise a judicial discretion. The words "it shall be lawful" in such a case are not equivocal, but are plain and unambiguous. They merely make that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do ; and according to their natural meaning they are permissive or enabling words only. Sulaiman, Ag. C. The Act is in force when he is suing, even though his cause of action might have accrued before the Act was passed. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Object of legislature.

A new law should be construed so as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights and a statute is therefore not to be construed to have a greater retrospective operation than its language renders necessary, and when the legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending actions, do not affect them. In the case of suit, which is not merely pending, but has already been decreed before the coming into force of a new Act, the decree so passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction remains good until reversed or set aside in appeal. It cannot automatically become invalid, merely because since the passing of that decree the law has been changed pending appeal therefrom, unless there is some clear provision in the new law to make it applicable to pending suits and appeal. ———New Act—Retrospective effect—Substantive rights—Choice of forum and limitation.

Sulaiman. Ag. C. J.—A substantial right is not assumed to be taken away by a new Act unless it expressly says so. But a right to sue in one Court rather than another or a right to wait for a particular period of time before suing is not a substantive right. The selection of forum and the period of limitation are ordinarily matters of procedure only. The selection of a Court in no way affects the right of suit itself. The Limitation Act does not necessarily extinguish the right, though it certainly places a bar against the remedy by suit. When a question of limitation is raised it ought to be decided in accordance with the question of limitation in force at the time of the institution of the suit and not that in force at the time of the cause of action unless there be any express provision to the contrary in the Act itself. Courts of justice are not concerned with the objects with which the legislature enacts any particular law unless in the particular enactment the object is stated as a guiding principle to be followed in interpretation. It may well be that the promoters of any particular bill in the legislature may have particular objects in view but any section as ultimately enacted may well be the result of the compromise and it may be that the words ultimately agreed upon have been passed by the legislature in such a form that one or all the objects of the promoters is defeated. In cases therefore where the legislature has not thought fit to express its intention otherwise than by the use of the words of the section, those words must be followed. (*Courtney-Terrell, C.J. ———Plain meaning—Departure when justified,

Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice, presumably not intended, construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence. This may be done by departing from the rules of grammar, by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, by altering their correlation by rejecting them altogether, or by interpolating other words, under the influence, no doubt, of an irresistible conviction that the legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications thus made are mere corrections of careless language and really give the true meaning. Where the main object and intention of a statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskilfulness or ignorance of the law, except in a case of necessity, or the absolute intractability of the language used. ———Preamble—Reference to—Madras City Tenants Protection Act (III of 1922).

A reference to the preamble of an enactment is permissible in two classes of cases, to clear up an ambiguity in the text of the statute or to indicate the particular instances to which the apparently unqualified and very general language of the enactment was intended to apply. It is, indisputable that before restricting the scope of an Act by the terms of its preamble, the Court must be satisfied that there was an intention on the part of the legislature that its scope should be so restricted and, in fact, that the legislature would have agreed, had the point been so put, that the passage relied upon in the preamble should form part of the text of the Act. But the language of the Madras City Tenants Protection Act (III of 1922), conferring on the tenants rights of compensation and acquisition is sufficiently clear and explicit.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Preceding or succeeding sections.

It may be hard, it may be unjust but there is no ambiguity about it. And the preamble when it talks of "the hope of the tenants that they would not be evicted" is so vague and indefinite and so far from defining any particular class of tenants that the legislature can hardly have intended to make it a qualification for the acquisition of rights under the Act. The preamble of this act cannot therefore be invoked to restrict the scope of the provisions of the Act. (Curgenven and Bashyam Ayyangar, JJ.) C. The title and preamble of a statute may be relied upon as aid to the understanding of the meaning thereof, or for determining the general object and intention of the legislature in passing the enactment. When the language, object and the scope of the Act are not open to doubt, the enacting part cannot be restricted, extended or modified by reference either to the title or preamble. Where an existing right is likely to be taken away by the operation of an Act, unless there is something which compels a Court to give the Act a retrospective effect, it will not give the Act that effect. Craies Statute Law, Edn. 3, pp. 326, 330 and 331, Ref. ———Retrospective effect—Procedural law.

No doubt a statute cannot be construed to have retrospective effect unless its language makes it clear that the intention was that it should have retrospective effect But this principle cannot be applied to enactments dealing with procedure which are always retrospective to this extent that provisions will apply to proceedings already commenced at the time of their enactment, the reason being that no one can have vested right in forms of procedure. While provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. A right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure. It is a vested right created by statute. IRISH FREE STATE CONSTITUTION (AMENDMENT No. 22) ACT (1933)—Prohibition of appeal to King in Council—Validity.

The Treaty and the Constituent Act respectively form parts of the Statute of the United Kingdom, each of them being parts of an Imperial Act. Before the passing of the Statute of Westminster, it was not competent for the Irish Free State Parliament to pass an Act abrogating the Treaty because the Colonial Laws Validity Act forbade a Dominion Legislature to pass a law repugnant to an Imperial Act. The effect of the Statute of Westminster was to remove the fetter which lay upon the Irish Free State Legislature by reason of the Colonial Laws Validity Act. The Legislature can now pass Acts repugnant to an Imperial Act. Hence the Constitution (Amendment No. 22) Act of 1933, by which proviso to Art. 66 of the Constitution of 1922 has been removed and appeals to the King in-Council are now prohibited is valid. Whatever might be the position of the King's prerogative, if it were left as matter of the common law, it is here in this particular respect and in this particular enactment made matter of Parliamentary legislation, so that the prerogative is pro tanto merged in the statute, and the statute gives powers of amending and altering statutory prerogative. JAMMU AND KASHMIR MUNICIPAL REGULATION, Ss. 34 and 38—Legitimate purpose—Acquisition of land for building of shops.

The building of shops by the municipality in connection with a large scheme of improvement is a legitimate object for which the Municipality may under Ss. 34 and 38 of the Municipal Regulation move the Government for compulsory acquisition of land. The acquisition of land for the building of shops is not an acquisition separate from the acquisition of land for the construction of a new thoroughfare which is needed for the benefit of the public. It is the ordinary method of town improvement that when a road is widened and the locality is improved, a larger area than that required is compulsorily acquired so that on the balance of the land not required for the road, the municipality can make profit by sale of that land and pay the cost of widening the road. A betrothal may be subject to conditions and if those conditions are not fulfilled, the betrothal is void. ———Marriage—Marriage of man to widow of his deceased brother.

The marriage of a man to the widow of his deceased brother who has died childless is known as yibboom. The procedure which follows the refusal of the surviving brother to marry his sister-in law is known as halissa, and when it is carried out it has the effect of setting the widow free to marry again according to her own choice. The modern Jew refuses to marry his brother's widow and openly disobeys the Mosaic law in this respect. A Jew whose brother has died and left a childless widow now prefers to submit to the procedure implied by the word halissa. The consequence is that the odium which formerly attached to the refusal of the surviving brother to marry his sister in law no longer exists, and the halissa ceremony has been so modified that it is now carried out in a manner which entails no unpleasant consequences to the unwilling brother-in law. ———Appeal—Forum—Suit for redemption filed in Munsiff's Court—Appeal remanded for ascertaining improvements amounting to Rs. 5,000—Appeal to District Judge or High Court.

In a redemption suit the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction of the trial Court had been fixed at Rs. 99. The suit was dismissed but on appeal, the appellate Court remanded the case to the trial Court for a finding regarding the value of improvements made by the mortgagee. On remand the lower Court found the value of improvements to be Rs. 5,000. An objection was then taken that the value of the improvements being Rs. 5,000, the appeal lay to the High Court and not to the District Judge.

Held, that for purposes of jurisdiction in the trial Court the value of the suit was Rs. 99 and on the dismissal of the suit it remained the same for purposes of the appeal to the District Judge. Hence the appeal had been properly valued and was cognizable by him. The fact that the value of the improvements was Rs. 5,000, did not oust the jurisdiction of the District Judge to entertain the appeal and to decree the amount in favour of the mortgagee as a condition precedent to the redemption of the mortgage, if he ultimately found that the mortgagor was bound to pay for the improvements. The plaintiff alleged that he was the sub-tenant of a particular plot and that the defendants have wrongfully cut away the crops sown by the plaintiff from his field on 6th October, 1928. He claimed damages for the losses of the crops. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was the sub-tenant and pleaded that the holding had been surrendered long before that date and that the crops had not been sown by the plaintiff. A question as to forum having been raised,

Held, that if the plaintiff was dispossessed from its holding as a result of the cutting away of the crops which had been sown by him, he might have instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for the recovery of possession of his holding and also for compensation for wrongful dispossession under S. 99 of the Agra Tenancy Act. If he could have claimed adequate relief through the Revenue Court, he was bound under S. 230 to have recourse to it. The mere fact that the relief claimed by him is not in form identical with what he might have claimed is immaterial. On the other hand if the plaintiff was really not dispossessed from his holding at all but his crops were cut and removed his remedy would lie in the Civil Court. ———Rr. 3 and 9—Occupancy holding—Building of house—Nature of holding altered.

The plaintiff brought a suit for possession of a house built on a plot of land and a courtyard attached thereto. The defendant contended that the said plot of land was his occupancy holding. The parties were the residents of the Kumaun District, U. P. The suit was confined to the house and the courtyard and not to any other part of the plot used for agricultural purposes. The plaint did not suggest that the property claimed was being used for any agricultural purposes.

Held, that in the above circumstances when the landlord allowed a building to be put on, the nature and character of the holding changed and it ceased to be land held for agricultural purposes. The plot was therefore not a holding within the meaning of the Kumaun Rules and the suit was of a civil nature and congnizable by a Civil Court. ———S. 9—Omission to specify amount of claim—Sufficient cause—Appellate Court—Powers of.

The appellate Court can consider the question as to whether the failure of the claimant to specify the amount of his claim was with or without sufficient cause and whether the omission could be condoned where the District Judge had failed to do so. Where a claimant failed to specify the amount of his claim before the Land Acquisition Officer in the belief that he was not required to do so, such belief would indubitably afford a sufficient ground for condonation, and more so, when the claimant had placed materials showing what his expert considered to be a fair compensation and the Land Acquisition Officer dealt with the claim on the materials placed before him without demur and without requiring the claimant to make the claim more specific. ———Ss. 9 and 23—Scope—Compensation under each sub-head of S. 23, if need be specified by claimant.

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 9.

does not require him to specify the amount of compensation he claims in respect of each of the six sub-heads referred to in S. 23 of the Act. A failure therefore to specify the amount claimed in respect of any particular sub-head of S. 23 is no bar to the Judge reviewing the award of the Land Acquisition Officer in respect of such sub-head. ———S. 11—Amount of compensation—Rule regarding.

———S. 11—Award by Land Acquisition Officer—Contents of.

Although S. 26 requires the Judge to specify in his award the several particulars referred to therein, it is sufficient for the Land Acquisition Officer under S. 11 to state what he considers to be fair compensation to be allowed for the whole of the land under acquisition and how it should be apportioned. S. 25 refers to the whole claim made by the claimant, and the whole amount of compensation awarded to him under S. 11, and empowers the Judge to alter the award of the Land Acquisition Officer under any one or more of the sub-heads by either decreasing or increasing the amount awarded, provided he does not award less than the total amount awarded by that Officer or more than the total amount claimed before that Officer by the claimant. ———Ss. 11 and 26—Award under—Difference.

Under S. 26 the award of the Court is not the same as anaward by the Collector under S. 11. An award by the Collector under S. 11 must include the apportionment of the compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information whether or not they have respectively appeared before him. That forms no part of the award as defined in S. 26. Hence an award of Court under S. 26 cannot be deemed to be a decree executable against the Collector. (Das and Brown, JJ.)

The Act does not contemplate that where more than one person is interested in a parcel of land there should be more than one award relating thereto. There is no suggestion that on such a reference the Court should have to decide, whether or not the Collector had been so negligent that he should be required to pay the compensation twice over to different persons, and a question of that sort is one which can only be decided satisfactorily in a separate suit. ———S. 23—Market-value—Belting system—Value of—Front and back lands—Soundness of distinction.

The value of belting system, though widely used, depends much on a variety of facts. In land acquisition or improvement schemes in and near about Calcutta, land is generally divided into blocks facing some particular street or road or lane and each block is divided into three belts, the first to a depth of 60 feet or so, on the road frontage, the second to a depth of about 150 feet thereafter and the third consisting of all land behind and the relative values of the three belts are fixed in the proportion of 100,66 6 and 50. But in localities where land is sold by bighas or acres, and there is no real evidence of such proportionate diminution in value, the system is based on no sound principle and must be regarded as unsatisfactory. Of course there is a distinction in value between front lands and back lands everywhere, but that would not justify a recourse to the belting system in each and every case. It is a highly artificial system and cannot be resorted to as a hard and fast rule. Nor again can there be any hard and fast rule, that back land must be of less value than front land or that the proportion should be as one to a half or that there must be a certain proportion at a certain distance from the road. 36 C. 967; 11 C.L.J. 612; A.I.R. 1926 B. 44; 10 B. 585; 33 B. 325; 11 C.L.J. 393 and 18 C.L. Where there is evidence of sales of similar lands in the vicinity, having similar irrigational facilities, the Land Acquisition Officer is bound to take such sales into consideration while fixing the market-value of the land in question and the mere fact that the owners have not cultivated it for the last ten years is no ground for capitalizing the value of it at one tenth or less of the net income, where it is not shown that the land remained uncultivated because of the poverty of the soil. In valuing immovable property, the Court is justified in taking a broad view as favourable to the owner as the evidence permits. LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 23.

———S. 23—Tenancy land—Basis of compensation.

The true tests for determining the amount of compensation which ought to be awarded to the proprietors in the case of tenancy lands is to ascertain the market-value of the land. The correct rule in all cases of this class is that the land to be acquired is to be valued in the first instance including all interests and the amount so ascertained has then to be apportioned amongst the parties interested according to their interests. ———S. 23—Valuation—Adjacent land.

The valuation with reference to a plot which is very close to the acquired land cannot form the basis of valuation with regard to the lands far apart; but where the distance between the plots is so negligible as 75 yards, it does not make any difference when valuing a land on the locality, if the valuation is based on a document with reference to one plot in the locality which is of the same description with similar advantages as the other plots. Similarly land outside the Municipal limits can be valued in the same way as land in close proximity to the Municipal area. (*C. C. "Value" for the purpose of the Land Acquisition Act means the market-value of the property. ———S. 23—Value — Determination of— Property subject to restrictions—Possibility of restrictions being determined—Relevancy of.

In considering the claim of the owner, the value to be paid for is the value to the owner as it existed at the date of taking, not the value to the taker. The value to the owner consists in all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, but it is the present value alone of such advantages that falls to be determined. Again the value to be assessed is the value to the old owner who parts with his property and not the value to the new owner who takes it over. Where the old owner takes the property subject to restrictions, it is necessary to inquire how far these restrictions affect the value. In determining the burden of the restrictions one circumstance to consider is the chance of such a restriction being determined. When there was evidence to show that the area acquired was so situate as to make it possible that within a reasonable period some of it would become a building site, some allowance was made for such a possibility. The land had been originally granted to Municipality for purposes of agriculture and subsequently it was exempted from assessment on the understanding that it would be used as a tow path. But at the time when the notification for acquisition was issued, the land was not being used as a tow path nor was there any necessity to do so. It was argued that it was open to the revenue authorities to refuse to grant the permission for converting the land into building site and that therefore its potential value as building site could not be taken into account.

Held, that with the non-user of the land as a tow path, the proprietary rights of the Municipality in it to hold it as an ordinary agricultural land on payment of assessment were not at an end and therefore the potential value of the land as a building site could be taken into consideration in fixing the compensation. 1 Bom. Held, (i) the effect of S. 28 and Sch. A of the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859) is that the title of the purchaser is to be deemed to have vested in him on the date of the default and the defendants' interest as proprietors were forfeited or rather determined on 28 3 1925; and the acquired lands vested in the Collector free from encumbrances on 16 9 1925 and 22-12-1925; (ii) by the award of 16-9 1925 regarding A lands, abatement of Government revenue was allowed for the acquired lands from the kist previous to the date of taking possession and as at the time of sale the lands were no longer subject to the payment of Government assessment. The land acquired by the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal belonged to a Thakur ordinarily managed by shebaits. In a suit relating to that debutter estate, a receiver had been appointed by the Court to take possession of the properties. The Tribunal proposed to invest the compensation money in the purchase of other lands on the ground that there was no one competent to alienate the land.

Held, that as the receiver represented not only the Shebaits but also the Thakur, he was competent to alienate the land and so S. 32 was not applicable. Secondly even otherwise, under S. 32 (b), the receiver appointed by the Court was a person who had become absolutely entitled to the amount and to whom the Tribunal was consequently bound to pay and that the Tribunal had no discretion to invest it on the purchase of other lands. ———S. 54—Award giving compensation to three persons in certain shares—Objections by them regarding amount—Reference made by Collector—Two of them absent—Decree passed in favour of persons who appeared and case of others dismissed for default—Restoration petition dismissed—Appeal—Revision.

Under the Collector's award in connection with acquisition of a building, compensation was found payable to respondent 2 in respect of two-thirds of the ownership rights, to appellants and petitioners in respect of one-third of the ownership rights, and to respondent 3 in respect of electric fittings. On various dates within the period of limitation all those benefiting under this award applied to the Collector under S. 18 for a reference to Court. There were three such applications. The objections of all three applicants were directed against the amount of compensation and were not in respect of their shares. The Collector made one reference in respect of all three applications. The Court registered the reference as one proceeding, issued notice to all the objectors and framed issues in the presence of all upon 2nd February, 1934. Upon 3rd April, 1934, which was a date fixed for the recording of some of the plaintiff's evidence, none of the objectors were present or represented in Court except respondent 2. The Court dismissed the case of other two objectors for default. Application for restoration was dismissed and judgment was pronounced granting decree to respondent 2. Appellant and petitioners appealed against the award and also against the order dismissing petition for restoration.

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 54.

Held, that in the present proceedings the three objectors, although interested in the amount of the award, did not come forward upon the basis of the same contention. They made different claims in regard to the correct amount of that compensation, and they based their claims upon different evidence. It was therefore impossible to regard them as joint plaintiffs in a single suit, they have never joined in a joint objection, they have relied upon different allegations, they have wished to produce different evidence, and they have claimed different reliefs. But had there been no default in appearance and had the evidence of all objectors been recorded, the Court, when giving its award as to the amount of compensation which should be paid for the building, would have considered the whole of the evidence and would have come to one conclusion on the point; so that in the final result, each objector, except respondent 3 would have shared in the benefit, if any, awarded after consideration of the evidence of the other objectors. Hence proceedings were not similar to those in the three separate suits.

Held, also, that the Court was bound to follow the procedure in the Civil Procedure Code so far as it was possible to do so but that as the Court did not act without jurisdiction or commit any irregularity, no revision lay.

Held further, that the order dismissing the case for default was certainly not an award or part of an award, and therefore no appeal could lie from it under S. 54 of the Act and as respondent 2 did not request that the suit or proceedings should proceed as though the absentee plaintiffs had appeared, the absentee objectors could not claim any benefit under the final award. ———Abadi—Gauri Nawada—Right by custom to transfer houses with right of residence.

In Gauri Nawada, the Raiyats have the right by custom of transferring houses with right of residence and the Zemindars of the soil have no right to question such transfer. ———Abadi—House belonging to Zamindar—Right of transfer after Zamindar loses his right in village.

A distinction should be drawn between the position of persons who have been Zamindars and who in their capacity as Zamindars own houses in the village abadi and the condition of persons who are mere ryots. In the case of a mere ryot the Zamindar grants a license to the ryot to make a residence. Such a license remains a license and the ryot has no right of transfer of the house which he makes in pursuance of such license. But a house built or brought by a Zamindar is a transferable house and such rights of transfer do not cease when the Zamindar loses his proprietary rights in the village at an auction sale of his Zamindary share. LANDLORD AND TENANT—Abadi.

———Abadi—House not appertaining to agricultural holding—Presumption as to right of residence.

Where the house is found not to appertain to an agricultural holding the ordinary presumption is that a person, who has built a house on the site belonging to the Zamindar, has a right of residence to occupy it so long as the house stands or he does not abandon it. The right can be inherited by his legal heirs but in the absence of any custom is not transferable. (Sulaiman, A.J.C. and Bajpai, J.) NABI MAHOMED v. BHAGWAT PRASAD SHUKUL. I.R. 1931 All. 533=132 I.C. 565=1931 A. L.J. 649=15 R.D. 560=12 L.R. 303 (Rev.)=A.I.R. 1932 All. 33.

———Abadi— House erected by agriculturist and trader—House not forming part of holding.

Where a village is a purely agricultural village and a purely agricultural tenant occupies a house on a site belonging to the Zamindar there would be a presumption that the house is appurtenant to the holding. But a slight change of circumstances may alter the result. Thus where the occupiers are not merely tenants and cultivators but also dyers and printers and further it appears that the house was built before the ancestors of the occupant began cultivating the land.

Held, that it was open to the lower Court to find that the house was not an appurtenance to the holding. (Sulaiman, A.J.C. and Bajpai, J.) NABI MAHOMED v. BHAGWAT PRASAD SHUKUL. I.R. 1931 All 533=132 I.C. 565=1931 A.L J. 649=15 R.D. 560=12 L. R. 303 (Rev.)=A.I.R. 1932 All. 33.
